Attack outrages business leaders

Labour 'front men' exposed by Heseltine

By JUL SHERMAN, ANDREW PIERCE AND PHILIP BASSETT

MICHAEL HESELTINE OF raged some of Britain's top businessmen yesterday by ac-cusing them of being troot men for the Labour Party and of writing a politically motivated report.

Having demanded an invitation to speak at a conference to be addressed by Tony Blair, the Deputy Prime Minister insulted his hosts by claiming that the whole event was a "set up" to give the illusion that. Labour had business support.

He then angered British Airways as well, by claiming that it had struck a deal with Labour to win exemption from its proposed windfall tax on privatised utilities.

Mr Heseltine made his allegations at a conference held in London to lannich the report, Promoting Prosperity, by the Commission on Public Policy and British Business; whose members include the super-market chief David Sams bury, the British Aerospace chairman Bob Baseman, the GEC managing director George Simpson, and Sir-Christopher Harding chairman of Legal & General, which regularly contributes to the Conservative Party. The report came out insupport of a minimum wage, the Social Chapter of the Maastricht Treaty. British participation in a single European currency and an inde-pendent Bank of England with the freedom to set interest

But Mr. Heseltine denounced it as politically moti-vated and said: "I question the motives of those who cloak their political intentions with academic respectability."

He also attacked the leftleaning Institute of Public Policy Research, which commissioned the report and host-ed the conference, claiming that it was deliberately trying to give the impression that Labour was supported by businessmen when this was clearly not the case.

This is a front for the Labour Party, he said. This event is designed to give the impression that Tony Blair is speaking to an audience of commercial men and women. The trouble is that most of them are from the public sector, the media and admen." Mr Heseltine also irritated both British Airways and Labour with his remarks about the proposed windfall tax. "We read that British Airways have escaped the net," he said.

such thing as a free lunch. Evidently, if you work at it, there can be free dinners." Mr Blair his had a number of dinners with leading industri-alists, including Robert Ayling chairman of British Airways, — but both sides denied last night that any deal had been made.

Mr Heseltine, who telephoned the institute last week emanding a slot at the conference to express the Government's view, later told BBC Radio 4's PM programme that he had been determined to expose the political leanings of the conference. "I could see the set up to give Tony Blair an apparently clear run. It would have been presented as an independent exercise. It wasn't," he said.
ButProfessor George Bain,

the head of the London School of Business and chairman of policy commission, was "flabbergasted" by Mr Heseltine's allegations. "I regard it as an insult to myself and to my colleagues to be branded a front organisation for the Labour Party," he said. Professor Bain and fellow members of the commission later wrote to the Financial. Times describing Mr Heseltine's remarks as "a piece of political knockabout". Rejecting the suggestion that the commission was trying to "curry favour" with Mr Blair, the letter went on to say: "We were rather surprised at his comments, given that the commissioners are drawn from across the political spectrum and represent all sectors of British business. Commission sources said that while they had expected Mr Heseltine to disagree with some of their recommendations, they were surprised that he had chosen to attack in such personal terms business leaders who had created considerable wealth for Britain. And one member said: "Michael Heseltine has been right to stress the importance of competitiveness. Our report addresses that issue in a serious way. # Whitehall lapse let UK firm sell arms to Hutus

By MICHAEL EVANS DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

AN OFFICIAL inquiry has found that the Government failed to implement all the requirements of a United Na-tions arms embargo on Rwanda, thus allowing a British company to supply weapons to extremist Hutu militia.

Malcolm Rifkind, the Foreign Secretary, admitted in a written Commons answer yesterday that the UN arms embargo was not implement-ed in the Crown dependencies, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. It was from the Isle of Man that the Mil-Tec Corporation masterminded the supply of military equipment worth more than £3.3 million to Rwandan militia in Zaire during the Rwandan genocide in 1994 - as disclosed in The Times.

The sale of arms was uncovered after papers were found in eastern Zaire when Hutu militja fled refugee camps

The Government announced last November that it had established an inter-departmental committee to see if there had been a gap in armstrafficking controls. Mr Rifkind said that the lapse, which also included a delay in implementing the embargo in the dependent territories such as Gibraltar, Bermuda and Hong Kong, had been right last month. A committee had also been set up to coordinate the imposition and lifting of embargoes.
Customs investigators were still seeking to establish whether there had been any illegal acts "coming within the UK's jurisdiction", he said.

Tony Loyd, Shadow Foreign Minister, accused the Government of gross incompetence: The Government has failed to provide adequate explanation of why it did not extend the arms embargo against Rwanda to the Isle of Man."

Tories lose Lords vote on gun law

"I've heard that there is no

BY JAMES LANDALE

THE Government suffered a fresh defeat in the House of Lords last night when peers voted to pay compensation to gun clubs forced to close as a result of Michael Howard's new firearms legislation. The Government had been prepared to pay only market value compensation worth about £150 million for large calibre handguns and their accessories, which will be made illegal by the Firearms (Amendment) Bill, introduced after the Dunblane massacre. Shooters' associations said that if the defeat stood, the Government would have to

The Lords voted by 158 to 135, a majority of 23, in favour of an amendment backed by Lord Swansea, the chairman of the British Shooting Sports Council, and many other Tory peers. The Home Secretary suffered a double defeat in the Lords on Monday over plans for police bugging powers.

However, the gun amendment is likely to be overturned when the Bill returns to the Commons. A similar amendment was defeated by MPs when the Bill first went through the House. A second amendment last night, giving compensation to anybody who suffered loss as a result of the Bill, was defeated by 147 to 120, a Government majority of 21.

'Lowbrow' Del Boy gets it in neck from schools guru

By DAVID CHARTER, EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT

DEL BOY and Rodney, the stars of Only Fools and Horses, were singled out yesterday as prime examples of the lowbrow culture undermining school standards. Chris Woodhead, the Chief inspector of Schools, said that the stars of the BBC comedy, which attracted British television's highest audience yet, 24.35 million, at Christmas, were poor role models and their popularity reflected low national aspirations.

Another example of low cultural expectations was the choice of The Lord of the Rings as the nation's favourite book of the century. Mr Woodhead added, J.R.R. Tolkien's lantapay millions more in compensy epic came top of a poll by Waterstone's, the booksellers, and Channel 4; the result dismayed Germaine Greer and other academics because writers such as Somerset Maugham and J.B. Priestley were overlooked. Mr Woodhead, in response to questions after a lecture in London on raising standards, said that it was the job of teachers to try to instil greater discernment. Parents and society generally also had to help to promote more edifying works instead of blaming teachers for failing to raise standards, "What was the most popular programme over Christmas? What is the most popular book? If The Lord of the Rings is our favourite book, what is it saying about our attitude towards quality in the arts?" Mr

Woodhead asked. English teachers ought to be trying to develop discrimi-nation. The Lord of the Rings is an immensely readable book, but it is not the greatest work of English literature this century. Schools function within society and it is naive to blame schools for all social wrongs. I am at times pessimistic about cultural expectations and social support for teachers. If Del Boy and Rodney are the only role models available to the young. then we have problems."

Mr Woodhead's views echoed those of Dr Nick Tate, the Government's most senior curriculum adviser, who called last year for more Mozart and less Blur on schoolchildren's CD players.

A spokesman for John Sullivan, the writer of Only Fools and Horses, said: "If he [Mr Woodhead] watched Only Fools and Horses, he would know they went to a terrible school. However, they strive to be happy and they have good

A BBC official said: "Only Fools and Horses is written by the top comedy writer in this country, if not the world, and the levels of performance and production values are excellent. It is popular programming and its aim is to entertain, so I don't see what Mr Woodhead is on about."

The Lord of the Rings was defended by Malcolm Bradbury, Professor Emeritus of American Literature at the University of East Anglia: "It has a very special cultural value. It is a book that crosses the magic line between childhood and adulthood.

Tony Blair said that children in need of intensive care beds were being "turned away" from hospitals. John Major insisted that no child in need of a bed had been refused one. The two statements are easily reconciled by a third: that where a bed is unavailable in one hospital, it is offered in another.

Neither Blair nor Major was prepared to articulate this obvious truth. It is insufficiently cheerful for the Government and insufficiently hysterical for the Opposition. So we had a ridiculous shouting match which on this occasion, John Major won - by pointing out, to some effect, that if Mr Blair really believed that there was an NHS crisis, it was odd that he would not commit himself to increasing NHS funding.

SOME of the captains of industry accused by Michael Heseltine yesterday of being stoages for the Labour Party have voted Conservative all their lives.

None of the 15 members of the Commission on Public Policy and British Business, which wrote a report critical of the state of the British economy, can have been more surprised to have been associated with the socialist cause than Sir Christopher Harding, the chairman of Legal &

Redwood condemns calls for European smartcard

PROM LEYLA LINTON IN BRUSSELS

THERE was a marked lack of enthusiasm in Britain last night for the proposed intro-duction of a European smartcard that would act as an identity document, driving licence and electronic purse.

It is possible that the card. proposed by MEPs and sup-ported by the European Commission and several member states, could be introduced alongside a single currency. It could carry personal information and, eventually, could be used as a passport or even as a house key. British MEPs have contribused to the proposals, to be published in detail next month. John Stevens (C. Thames Valley), who contrib-uted to a report by the Eurooean Parliament's monetary affairs sub-comittee, said the basic proposal was for the European Central Bank to issue a standard bank card at the same time as the launch of the euro, but that the card could also be turned into an

Atiya Lockwood, a spokeswoman for Liberty, said the smartcard would raise issues of whether people would be required to carry it, or effectively be barred from using a range of services and goods if they did not have one. Government officials immhall spokesman said. Mr Stevens said: "We are trying to kick-start the debate and bring it out into the open. We would hope that the report, would prompt the European Monetary Institute to show their hand on the subject."

France, Germany, The Netherlands, Spain and Italy are already considering ways of upgrading their citizens' identity documents. Private sector companies and banks keen to avoid fraud would promote the card, according to Mir Stevens. "It is not a question of using taxpayers' money." # Ministers may expel loyalists from talks

BY NICHOLAS WATT, CHIEF IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

LOYALIST terrorists were: warned by the Government yesterday that their political representatives, may be expelled from the Stormont talks after a series of bomb attacks on Catholics.

in a marked toughening of its position, the Northern Ireland Office said that recent loyalist bombings "inevitably raise questions" about the position of the political parties linked to the terrorists.

Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Northern Ireland Secretary. had insisted until yesterday that the loyalist ceasefire remained intact even after terrorists tried to murder two prominent republicans in Belast and Londonderry. But ministers decided to register their unease about the loyalist ceasefire after terrorists tried to murder a Roman Catholic couple and their baby girl in Larne, Co Antrim, on Monday, John Shaw, 37, and his girliriend, Adele Burly, 25, escaped when a bomb exploded under their van.

Ministers will face calls for the Progressive Unionist Party and the Ulster Democratic Party, the political wings of the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Ulster Defence Association, to be expelled from the Stormont talks when the first plenary session of the year is held on Monday. The British and Irish Governments can expel any party if its members have breached the Mitchell principles of non-violence.

Doctor quizzed on murder struck off for dishonesty

By GLEN OWEN AND CAROL MIDGLEY

A HEART surgeon who was questioned about the murder of his former flatmate three years ago was struck off yesterday after the General Medical Council heard that he had "wriggled and squirmed. and lied" in his personal and professional affairs.

Glenworth Curamings, 34, was suspended from the doc-tors' register in June 1995 after he was convicted of forging the signature of former classmate and gynaecologist Dr Joan

Dr Francisco was the main prosecution witness at his trial at Knightsbridge Crown Court in October 1994 and had rigged herself up with a tape recorder to record his admissions that he had used her name on the mortgage appli-cation for a flat in Hampstead, north London, and to try to buy a Jaguar XJS car.

She was found murdered in her north London flat on Boxing Day 1994. She had been strangled with a vaccum cleaner cord.

Her body was found at the bottom of her stairs and her bedroom had been ransacked. It is believed she was killed while packing for a holiday in Los Angeles where she was iately questioned by police. In a statement not read out at his original trial she had alleged that he had spied on her while she was undressing while they were sharing a house. No body was charged with her murder and Mr Cummings, who was never avverted true. who was never arrested, was later ruled out as a suspect.

Rosalind Poster of the GMC, yesterday told the professional conduct committee of Mr Cummings' tangled finan-cial affairs since his conviction. She said that since the committee had suspended him in June 1995, three new irregularities had emerged.

Mr. Commings had claimed he was employed as a cardiol-ogist at the Royal Brompton Hospital and the National Heart and Lung Institute while applying to Selfridges for a credit card, she said. He also gave false addresses and faise information about his employment on two credit card applications on October 8 and 19 last year, to Sears

Financial Services, she said. They secured credit for Mr Cummings which otherwise would not have been granted. Healso gave false employment details to two medical agencies with whom he was seeking work. Jane Schuck, a place ment officer with Medacs Health Care Services, which places locum doctors, told the

Cummings debts. She said he still owed £104,000 on the mortgage and £14,000 on the Jaguar car, along with a E4,000 overdraft at Lloyds Bank and £4,500 in legal fees for his failed appeal against his suspension. Despite this, she said, he

A FATHER risked his life by walking along a slippery girder 138ft above a river yesterday to stop his suicidal son from jumping. The drama ended as the two men hugged.

Police negotiators had tried without success for two hours to persuade the 20-year-old son to climb back to safety from the foot-wide ledge on the Cornwall. The depressed man was taunted with cries of "Jump" from onlookers and passing drivers.

Officers had not dared to venture on to the ledge because it was so slippery from the rain. The 53-year-old father arrived and immediately climbed out to the rescue without consulting the police. The two spoke, then hugged

The bridge is so notorious for suicide attempts that the Samaritans are hoping to put up an advertisement at either end. In the past five years, ten people have jumped off and eight have been killed.

Acting Sergeant David Cartwright of Saltash police praised the courage of the lather, who is not being named to protect the identity of his son. Sgt Cartwright said: "This was a very difficult situation because the man was perched on a very narrow, slippery ledge with his legs hanging over.

"He was in an extremely agitated state and refused to speak to us for quite a while. We tried to build up some kind of rapport but he was not communicative and it did not help that a crowd gathered below and some passing drivers wound down their windows and shouted 'Jump!'.

"We were trying to calm the lad down but he was right on the edge. He was not mentally ill but he had personal difficulties which he had not been able to talk to anyone about. It seems he had the type of problems which a lot of young people have today - no job, no prospects, and no girlfriend.

friend sought to destroy him

By Lin Jenkins

THE man who made allegations that Premiership football matches had been fixed admitted yesterday that he turned on his friend Bruce Grobbelaar and set out to destroy him after their business collapsed.

Christopher Vincent also admitted that he stood to make a fortune if any of the three footballers on trial for allegedly rigging results was convicted of the crime. Mr Vincent, a chief witness in the trial at Winchester Crown Court, will not at least £76,000 from a book deal with the publishers Macmillan and about £100,000 from a television company if the goalkeeper, John Fashanu or

Hans Segers are found guilty. The contract for Betrayal of Trust: The Inside Story of the Biggest Scandal in Sporting History includes a clause making payment and publication dependent upon the sentencing of those convicted.

Mr Vincent, who was declared bankrupt with debts of £98,820 in March 1995, has also entered a deal with Samuel Kersh, an agent, to sell serial rights and handle potential film and television deals.

Rodney Kievan, QC, for Mr Grobbelaar, said to him: "It is in your interest to try and secure a conviction against one or more of these men." He asked Mr Vincent "It is payment by results, isn't it?" Mr Vincent replied: "Yes sir." Mr Vincent had a series of business failures to his name. Three companies had ceased trading before he set up Mon-doro Ltd to provide holidays to his native Zimbabwe and recruited his countryman Mr Grobbelaar as an investor.

Mr Vincent, who was paid £35,000 for selling his story to The Sun and huring Mr Grobbelaar into agreeing to act for a ficitious ring of gamblers from the Far East, lived off the £65,000 which Mr Grobbelaar invested in the company. Mr Klevan said that, after the failure of the venture, "you turned like a viper on him". Mr Vincent: "That's correct." Mr Klevan: "Because there was money still to be made?"

Mr Vincent: "That was not the reason." Mr Klevan: "Mr Vincent you will destroy your friend by lies, not by truth, as long as you can make your money." Mr Vincent: "That is not

Mr Klevan: "It is true you seek to destroy him."
Mr Vincent. "Yes sir." The hearing continues.

Grobbelaar's | Put me back in prison, says man bored with bail

Led to freedom once more. David Watson, who is appealing against a threatening behaviour conviction, decided to ask his lawyers to help him to be locked up legally. South-wark Crown Court in south-east London was told.

Abiud Kaihiva, his counsel, explained: "He became aware he was suspended from his work and instead of wasting away his time without doing anything he felt the best thing to do was to serve the remainder of his sentence." Martin Latiffe, for the Crown, who said he had never come across such a case before, told Judge Jackson that Watson was now making a formal application for his bail to be rescinded. Watson was found guilty at Horseferry Road Magistrates Court of threatening behaviour at a nightclub and jailed for three weeks just before Christmas.

He gave notice of appeal and six days later was granted bail. But the fireman decided that life on the inside was better than on the outside and duly returned for a further spell of bed and board at Her Majesty's Pleasure.

However, after passing several apparently contented days behind bars, Watson, whose appeal is due to be heard next month, was told he had to go. "Someone realised they had no right to keep him because he was effectively still on bail. It had not been rescinded and he had not breached it," Mr Latiffe said.

As if being thrown out of prison was not bad enough for him, it has since emerged that his voluntary return to Brixton was wasted "porridge" and could not count as part of his sentence if he lost his appeal.

The judge, refusing to re-scind Watson's bail, said: You can't have somebody volunteering to go to prison in circumstances where he has a live appeal ... that is an odd combination. He could not allow Watson's plea "simply because he wants to do something with the spare time he has got at the moment".

Watson, from Mitcham, Surrey, then once again reluctantly walked to freedom.

Incidents of "road rage" are also multiplying, the survey reveals. An estimated 275,000 people a year have their ears deliberately hit by other road users and about 130,000 a year are physically attacked. Almost three quar-ters of drivers confessed to feelings of rage, with just over half having verbally abused or gestured at another driver.

The report also found that "more speed cameras with fines if more than 20mph over the limit" would be the measure most likely to improve driving.

Howard may accept compromise to salvage Police Bill

المكذا من الأصل

MICHAEL HOWARD is considering a compromise to ensure that the Police Bill gets through the Commons after the Lords voted against his plans for the bugging of suspected criminals' homes.

The Home Secretary is expected to table amendments that go close to accepting Labour's demand that chief constables get approval from special commissioners before surveillance operations go ahead, rather than after.

However, he wants to make clear that the police will still be able to go ahead without approval in emergencies. Labour says its amendment. passed by the Lords on Monday night, already makes that provision, but Mr Howard seems certain to insist on greater clarity. He is also likely to reject the Liberal

GCHQ signals readiness to help overcome organised crime

Security sources say the technological resources of the Government's signals intelligence centre can be used to monitor major criminals. Michael Evans reports nals intelligence centre is ready to play a decisive role in combating organised crime, security sources said yes-

The part played by Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ), based in Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, in helping police, Customs and the security agencies to tackle serious crime is seldom recorded. However, as the Government struggled yesterday to win Opposition support for its Police Bill, aimed at giving the police powers to bug and burgle suspected organised criminals without the need for prior judicial authorisation, sources said its huge technological resources were available to assist law enforcement agencies. GCHQ's principal function is to provide signals intelligence support for military operations. It played a crucial role in assisting British military commanders in the Gulf War and, currently, in the peacekeeping operation in Bosnia-Herzegovina where more than 5,000 British soldiers are serving.

Although GCHQ is constrained by the tasking re-quirements set by the Cabinet Office's Joint Intelligence Committee (JIC), it is permit-ted under the 1994 Intelligence Services Act to deal with organised crime, especially where international criminal godfathers with transnational operations threaten the security of this country.

The security sources said that while GCHQ was principally involved in "outward" (overseas) eavesdropping op-erations, it had the capability and the authorisation to listen "inwards" when its major customers, such as the police and Customs, sought its help: in monitoring the activities of criminals.

One senior security source said: "This is still only a small" proportion of GCHQ's work. which is mainly aimed at overseas, but it has the technological skills that could make a difference in tackling organised crime." The JIC, whose membership includes David Omand, the new director of GCHQ who took over in July, has not yet ordered the eavesdropping

THE Government's secret sig-centre to increase monitoring operations against organised

However, organised crime is now regarded as one of the growing threats to the security of this country which will increasingly involve every law enforcement and security agency. MI5 now has officers attached to the National Criminal Intelligence Service who are empowered, under the 1996 Security Service Act. to tackle organised crime where it affects national security.

Under Mr Omand, formera senior official at the Ministry of Defence, GCHQ has acquired a sharper and more Whitehall-attuned reputation. After dealing with ministers for so long as an MoD official. Mr Omand is aware of ministerial sensitivities and has emphasised to his staff of specialist scientists and engineers the importance of being flexible in the new post-Cold War era.

Under the Intelligence Services Act, GCHQ can be authorised by the Secretary of State to eavesdrop on criminals involved in organised crime that threatens the security of the state. Although GCHQ comes under the political aegis of the Foreign Secretary, one security source said: Secretaries of states are indivisible."

In other words, requests for GCHQ assistance could come from the Home Office or other Government departments. who would merely be expected to liaise with the Foreign Secretary before authorisation is given.

GCHQ is spending a large proportion of its estimated £500 million annual budget on computer equipment to keep pace with the rapid advances in communication technology. Digital mobile phones, used by organised criminals and terrorist organ-isations, have presented a major but not insurmountable challenge.

The Cheltenham centre is also embarking on a comprehensive reorganisation. Under the previous director, Sir John Adye, now retired, moves were made to reduce the workforce of about 6,000 - including outlying stations at home and abroad — to 4.500 by the end of the century.

Telephone codes to switch again after exchange fails

EIGHT million telephone users were told yesterday that they would need new numbers, barely two years after being promised that they would never have to change

London and other cities are already running out of num-bers. Oftel, the telephone regulator, said that the new codes would be introduced during 1999 and run in tandem with existing numbers for at least a year. Offel says the change will produce eight billion new numbers, meeting demand until at least 2015.

Seven million subscribers in London will be among the first to change. Business leaders yesterday complained that the cost and upheaval would come so soon after the switch to the Ol prefix, on "PhONEday" in 1995. Industry leaders esti-mate that it could cost £3 billion in printing, stationery. and reprogramming computers. The Telephone Users Association said: "Somebody did not do their homework properly so we face more disruption, and the numbers just get longer." Bill Mieran, the association's chairman, said: "We trust this change lasts a long while and we don't hear more excuses in a couple of years."

Labour called for the suspension of Don Cruickshank, -Oftel's Director General, pending an inquiry by the Committee into what it called a renumbering shambles. To : four years in this job that something that was started in future".

RINGING THE CHANGES

New telephone codes will be introduced in 1999 and run in parallel with existing numbers for at least a year.

London will be remited by popular demand under one code, 020. But the 0171 and 0181 prefixes, which Oftel says will have no further capacity in three years, will still feature as all London mimbers become eight-digit. So 0171-634 8700 changes to 020-7634 8700, and 0181-295 2100 becomes 020-

8295 2100. Those in London will not have to dial 020. Northern Ireland changes to an 028 code, with two or three digits added to the current number so 01232 926222 becomes 028-90 926222 and 016625 34567 will become 028-850 34567. The Province asked for a unified code.

Cardiff becomes 029 with the prefix 20 also added to the current number: 01222 926222 becomes 029-20 926222. There is also an option for an all-Wales code.

Portsmouth and Southampton will have 023, followed by 92 for Portsmouth and 80 for Southampton. Thus Portsmouth numbers will change from 01705 92622 to become 023-92-926222 and Southampton numbers such as 01703 926222 will become 023-80 926222.

Oftel is reserving 05 for corporate numbers, allowing businesses to adopt a single number for branches across the country.

By 2001, mobile phones and pagers will all be bracketed under 07 so callers will know they will be paying a higher

Simon Sperryn, its chief executive, said: This shows that PhONEday was nothing more than a stop-gap. With more foresight, these second changes in 18 months could have been avoided." The Consumers' Associ-

£10m child abuse inquiry to question 180 alleged victims

CHILDREN living in care homes in North Wales during the 1970s and 1980s were subjected to physical and sexual abuse "bordering on wholesale exploitation", a public inquiry was told yesterday.

At least ten of the alleged victims have since died. Most were known to have killed themselves because they could not bear to live with the consequences of the abuse they suffered from people entrusted with their care. Up to 180 alleged victims are due to give evidence to the North Wales Tribunal of Inquiry which began its investigations into the "seemingly endless series of allegations" of abuse of children emanating from a small number of homes. Numerous complaints involve two homes in Wrexham, Bryn Estyn, run by the council, and the privatelyrun Bryn Alyn. Peter Howarth, deputy head of Bryn Estyn, was jailed for ten years in July 1994 for sexual assaulting eight boys.

The tribunal, held in former council offices in Ewloe. Flintshire, and chaired by Sir Ronald Waterhouse, a former High Court judge, is expected to last a year and cost up to

Gerard Elias, QC, counsel for the tribunal, said members were determined to uncover the truth and promised to find our whether more could have been done by the local authorities, the North Wales Police or the Welsh Office to prevent the abuse or detect it earlier.

William Hague, the Welsh Secretary, announced the inquiry last June at the personal insistence of the Prime Minister after persistent rumours that the homes had been in the grip of a national paedophile ring, whose activities were linked to public figures.

Investigations by North Wales Police resulted in eight prosecutions and six convictions for criminal offences. There were numerous internal inquiries, culminating in the 300-page Jillings report com-missioned by Clywd County Council. But that still failed to dispel the "utmost disquiet".

Mr Elias, said that in this climate truth had been allowed to coexist with rumour and innuendo. The tribunal will determine whether there was any evidence of a greater organisation or infiltration by those with a determination to exploit vulnerable children in care".

He said: "The overwheming response by the tribunal interview team has been that complaining was not a real option. It brought no relief but risked yet worse treatment." He said questions will be asked over whether the level of funding from government and local authorities played a role in the quality of care.

Mr Elias, added: "If, as a whole, or in substantial part, they [alleged victims] are accepted by the tribunal, then it may be that they will compel the conclusion that children in care in Clwyd and Gwynedd during the period under review were abused physically and sexually on a scale that borders on wholesale exploita-

The tribunal was told that. although some files are miss-ing, they have records for 9,500 of the 12,000 children in care during the 20-year period in question. The inquiry has identified 650 complainants.

Mr Elias said it would seem an inescapable conclusion that, should abuse be proved, senior people in the social services were at best careless as to the plight of their charge and, at worst, negligent to the point of gross professional incompetence, or even guilty of deliberately shutting their eyes. Local authorities had often seen the numerous inquiries only as an embarrassing inconvenience, Sir Ronald made a ruling forbidding identification of elther the alleged abusers or the abused, except for those who have been prosecuted and convicted. He said that public exposure could deter potential

Masters of the world reunited from the spoils of power and empires

By MARCUS BINNEY

GLITTERING prizes of power have returned to London after more than two centuries of changing hands with the world's fortunes. This time they are on public show.

The collection of Old Masters was amassed by Eneland's first and long-serving Prime Minister, Sir Robert Walpole, in the early 18th century. His descendants sold 181 paintings to the Russian empress Catherine the Great. In the 1920s, Russia's new Communist rulers sold three to America to raise hard currency. Now Russia, America and Walpole's modern descendants, the Cholmondeley family, have co-operated in an exhibition that reunites some of the pictures at Kenwood House in Hampstead, north London, Parts of the collection were first hung together in the capital when Walpole was given 10 Downing Street to be his

Scientists lend a hand to swat flies

By NIGEL HAWKES SCIENCE EDITOR

THE ability of flies to avoid being swatted could prove to be their Achilles' heel, researchers at Sussex University

Flies can react to an approaching hand with sumning speed because of a brain structure called the giant fibre. This ribbon-like cell responds to the threat by rapidly triggering the parts of the brain that activate jumping and

Studies of how it works have raised the possibility of a new kind of insecticide aimed at disabling the fly's instant reac-tions. Such a flykiller would have the advantage of being harmless to other creatures. including human beings.

The giant fibre is fast because it communicates electrically, rather than through themical intermediaries as do other brain cells. Current flows through the fibre so quickly that the fly is on the move and out of range before the swat lands.

While a typical human being takes about a quarter of a second before the hand moves in response to something seen by the eye, the fastest insects are moving in a matter of a few thousandths of

Pauline Phelan, of the Sussex Centre for Neuroscience. and her colleagues are study-ing a strain of fruit fly that is easily swatted. As a result of a genetic defect, these flies cannot make a protein that is anparently responsible for estab-lishing the electrical connections between the giant fibre and other cells in the circuit. The Sussex team aims to prove this by introducing the gene into isolated cells. Higher animals have similar proteins, but their amino acid sequences are quite different. This indicates that invertebrates and vertebrates may have evolved different ways of producing proteins that per-form similar functions.

If so, it may be possible to design pesticides that selec-tively block the process in insects without having any effects in other creatures, Dr Phelan said. With their escape nechanisms disabled, the flies

A CRACKDOWN on drug abuse among prisoners proba-bly sparked 12 hours of rioting that caused damage estimated at £500,000 in a top security

The rampage in two wings at Full Sutton prison near York ended early yesterday when more than 100 speciallytrained prison staff stormed makeshift barriers built by the inmates. One person, a prisoner, was slightly injured.

Two wings at the prison were seriously damaged as prisoners wrecked everything apart from their cells, flooding communal areas and lighting small fires. Washing machines and drvers were destroved, snooker tables

wrath over league table By VALERIE ELLIOTT, WHITEHALL EDITOR MICHAEL HESELTINE is seeking talks with other Cabinet ministers to resolve a Whitehall dispute over his plans to publish a league table of the most poorly performing government agencies.

While officials had been

nappy to go along with league tables for schools and hospitals, they have denounced the Deputy Prime Minister's plan as "unfair and outrageous" The branches of government hived off under their own management, known as Next Steps agencies, set their own targets and measure their own performance. Mr Heseltine wants a table showing their performance to be included in next month's annual review of

Senior officials have tried to win over their departmental ninisters against the Cabinet Office plan: one said yesterday that it amounted to "un-tre" and that the Cabinet Office did not fully understand the agencies' business. "How mance of the Coastguard Agency, for example, with the paying of benefits? They are not comparable."

Mr Heseltine has decided to deal with ministers directly and is expected to meet lan Lang, the President of the Board of Trade, Michael Howard, the Home Secretary, Peter Lilley, the Social Sec-urity Minister, and Michael Forsyth, the Scottish Secretary. He is determined that the Cabinet Office should enforce standards and that agencies should be honest, open and accountable. His plans are also seen as an attempt to motivate agencies to improve their performance. The agencies that have failed to meet their own performance targets include the Patent Office and Companies awards for service to the public. Under the Home Office, the Prison Service is still not meeting all its targets, although officials believe it is markedly improving.

Mr Lilley is expected to be questioned about the continuing failure of the Child Support Agency to meet its targets, despite the improvements made by Ann Chant, its chief executive. In some cases there may be genuine reasons for an agency not meeting us targets: Heseltine's view is that the public should know why. Sir Peter Kemp, the former senior civil servant who devised the Next Steps concept, said last night "I am rather on Heseltine's side on this one. But if a league table is envisaged it should include the top as well as the bottom."

Spring blooms banish winter blues

THE colour and spring-like vigour of the Royal Horticultural Society's first flower show of the year banishes memories of the recent big freeze.

The highlight, and a gold medal win-ner, is the display of bold drifts of hellebores and miniature hardy cyclamen among yellow and red-flowered wych-hazels and Cornus mas, by Ashwood Nurseries of Kingswinford, West Midlands

Among the hellebores are doubleflowered forms of Ashwood Garden Hybrids in shades of pink, purple and peach-coloured flowers. Rarities include Helleborus vesicarius from Turkey with bell-shaped chocolate and green flowers, and the superb pale pink H. thibetanus, first showing for this Chinese species.

Cyclamen coum are being shown by several exhibitors, including the Cyclamen Society of Ewell, Surrey, offering Pewter Leaf, which is different from most forms as it has plain grey-green leaves rather than patterned foliage.

Southcombe Gardens, of Kenton, Devon, show what can be achieved in winter. Among beech trees still holding on to their golden-brown leaves, dark green hollies and willows with coloured bark. are clumps of grassy evergreen perennials such as black-leaved Ophiopogon planiscapus Nigrescens, gold Luzula sylvatica Hohe Taira, and varicgated Carex hachijoensis Evergold and Acorus gramineus Ogon. On the theme of winter colour, a collection of almost 20 kinds of shrubby cornus has been staged by the society's Floral B committee.

The highlight among exhibits of tropical plants is a collection of lycaste orchids from Henry Oakeley, of Beckenham, southeast London. He is showing his own Lycaste Mary, a complex hybrid that comes in various colours including bronze, pale yellow and dusky pink.

The show, at the New Horticultural Hall, Greycoat Street, Westminster, is open today from 10am to 5pm.

Labour has promised that if it wins the general election it will allow MPs a free vote on whether hunting with hounds should be banned. Legislation would follow a yes vote.

Mr Bragg told The Field

that he respected the passion and commitment of the antihunting lobby. "It is a wonderful cause, and I do not want to run down the people who support it, who are often people whom one admires, hom one has time for, but I think they are mistaken."

Mr Bragg, who was brought up in Cumbria where sheep farmers depend on fell packs to keep foxes down, goes on: They are not country people. They do not understand about culling. They do not understand the damage a fox can do to a hen coop."

In a logical world, he suggests, people would be campaigning to protect rats rather than foxes. The decision that foxes were cute while rats were vermin reflected an anthropomorphic view of wildlife.

A GAELIC rock singer chosen yesterday to contest a Highland seat for Labour says that he does not expect his celebrity status to make him a hit with the voters.

Donnie Munro, 43-yearold lead singer with Runrig, was confirmed as candidate for Ross, Skye and Inverness West with unanimous backing of local party members. At the general election he will fight the sitting Liberal Democrat MP, Charles Kennedy. who is defending a notional majority of 6,505 in the redrawn constituency.

Runrig have a huge following in Scotland, where record sales have been high enough to propel the hand into the British charts. At hogmanay they played to a crowd of 400,000 in Edinburgh. Mr

Munro, a former rector of Edinburgh University, was born and brought up in Skye and has used the band's popularity to campaign for the abolition of tolls on the Skye Bridge.

However, launching his political career in Dingwall yesterday, he said: "I am not standing here as a celebrity because I am not keen on that type of thing. It would be dishonest of me to say that this won't be useful, but it could also be argued that it could have a detrimental effect because some people will say that I am just a face."

He is not the only famous name who will be seeking political success in Scotland this spring. The Scottish National Party is fielding the Gaelic singer and television entertainer Anne Lorne Gilles in the Western Isles. The Tories have chosen the Earl of Elgin's son, Adam Bruce, a direct descendant of Robert the Bruce, for North East Fife, and David Campbeil-Bannerman, a great-nephew of the Liberal Prime Minister Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, for Glasgow Rutherglen.

According to Professor Bill Miller of Glasgow University's politics department, having a well-known name is unlikely to enhance their prospects. "Donnie Munro may hope to pick up a few hundred votes because of his fame but I doubt it would be as many as a thousand. British voters vote along party lines. They look beyond the personality. Even the policies of individual candidates do not have much effect on the voting habits at a general election. Having said that if a person is popular it is unlikely to them any harm."

And that was after Harold Wilson had earlier succeeded in defeating a left-wing call for leading companies. Tony Blair's speech at yesterday's IPPR conference on the report showed how far Labour has moved to be friendly to business. Gone is any hint of 1970s-style interventionism. Instead, the emphasis is on how government can help industry, encourage investment and improve infrastructure and skills.

Yesterday's IPPR report reflects that shift in thinking, a sober, rather mainstream discussion of how to improve Britain's industrial perfor-mance. Of course, the IPPR is a centre-left body with close Labour links, but for Mr Heseltine to attack the commission which produced the report on the same grounds risks alienating rather than winning over uncommitted businessmen. It is ridiculous to imply that several members of the commission, such as Sir Chistopher Harding of Legal and General and George Simpson of GEC, are Labour stooges. They have been far closer to the Tories.

Of course, many in industry will disagree with the report's support for the minimum wage and, reluctantly, signing the social chapter. Adair Turner of the CBI yesterday expressed reservations on these points while welcoming the report as "a major contribution to our national policy discussion". Many industrialists are also worried that a Blair government would add to industry's costs by regulanons and statutory requirements of various kinds. These are legitimate points for the Tories to make, but they are different in kind and degree from the far more fundamental arguments of 20 years ago.

The Government has a strong record on promoting enterprise and inward investment. But Mr Heseltine's over-the-top response was not only politically misjudged but underlines how hard the Tories are finding it to grapple with the adroit repositioning of Labour by Mr Blair and Gordon Brown. The Tories seem to be refighting the last election. Their claims about E30 billion in Labour spending commitments are wild exag gerations. There are certainly several spending loose ends in Labour policies which would undoubtedly complicate Mr Brown's life as Chancellor but they are on nothing like that scale. The more sensible Tory approach is that adopted by Kenneth Clarke on Monday, and John Major yesterday, in questioning whether Labour would be able to hold down spending in face of all the pressures to expand budgets.

R ecent Tory attacks have missed the target by lacking credibility. The public may be worried about whether a Labour government would be able to avoid tax increases but it does not believe that Mr Blair and Mr Brown are going to launch a public-spending spree or be hostile to business. Similarly, most businessmen, including some members of the IPPR commission, will probably not change the habits of a lifetime and vote Labour. But they no longer fear a Labour government as threatening their futures and livelihoods as they did in 1974. That in itself is a major achievement for Mr Blair, which Mr Heseltine and Tory propagandists have not

Poll puts Hamilton hearing in doubt

BY ARTHUR LEATHLEY POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

THE former Trade Minister Neil Hamilton is likely to escape a public interrogation over the cash-for-questions affair because senior Tory MPs want to avoid a damaging confrontation before the general election.

MPs on the Commons disciplinary committee are preparing to abandon plans to hold a series of hearings into accusations against Mr Hamilton. A detailed report into claims that he accepted gifts is being prepared for MPs by Sir Gordon Downey, the Parlia-mentary Commissioner for Standards. However, delays in drafting the report have created a dilemma for MPs on the Standards and Privileges Committee, who say they are running out of time to hold further hearings on the affair.

Sir Gordon's report, originally expected early this month, is unlikely to reach the committee until the end of next month. The MPs will then have to decide whether to accept it in full or carry out further investigations. Sir Gordon is now taking written and oral evidence over claims that Mr Hamilton accepted gifts, and that the lobbyist lan Greer paid other MPs to ask questions in the Commons. Because the Commons will be dissolved almost a month before the election date, MPs on the committee concede that there is little chance of holding a series of public hearings even if the election is on May I. We must hope that Sir Gordon's report is so detailed and well-prepared that there will be no need for us to carry out any more inquiries," one committee member said. "If we have to call Hamilton, it will only lead to other witnesses having to be called and there simply won't be time."

Clinton must balance quest for racial harmony with liberalism

IN WASHINGTON

PRESIDENT CLINTON made the plea for social harmony the central theme of his inaugural speech on Monday, when he dubbed racial hatred "America's constant curse". Yet his speech, which coincided with the public holiday commemorating Martin Luther King, lacked the credibility of Dr King's dream of a colour-blind society.

The flaw was not in the choice of words or delivery. Mr Clinton has self-consciousness. In the 34 years since Dr King declared "I have a dream", the United States has made huge efforts to weld together its diverse population. Yet that project has lost the optimism that accompanied it three decades ago. Worse, the increasing attempts to force warring cinzens to live with each other through legislation or social pressure are left by many to threaten the liberal principles also the gift of heing able to invoke big at the heart of American ideology.

against a backdrop of headline-grabbing events that have been seen across the country as particularly resonant of racial conflict. Yesterday, the civil trial on whether O.J. Simpson wrongfully killed his wife finished hearing evidence. Last week, the son of Bill Cosby, the television comedian who is a national hero, was shot dead, allegedly by a white man.

Since Mr Clinton ran for the governorship of Arkansas a decade ago, he has put the racism battle at the heart of his political priorities. In that, he represents to many the New South: economically and politically stronger and, its champions say, more racially tolerant. As Nicholas Lemann argued in The Washington Post this week: "Who else could win over whites while telling them that racial discrimination has not ended? Or win over blacks while telling them that all

Mr Clinton's inaugural speech did not exaggerate the ambition of the enterprise. No other nation is attempting a comparable social experiment, let alone putting its success at the heart of the national identity. Yet America's attempt to glue together its diverse elements is conflicting with many of the individual freedoms also central to its national identity. The strain surfaced in the presidential election with California's successfully passed proposition to outlaw affirmative action, the practice of giving minorities special treatment in jobs and public programmes.

More widely, political correctness is a much satirised vogue, but has clearly damaging effects. In trying to give each citizen the right not to be offended, it undermines American liberalism. Richard Bernstein, a New York Times journalist, assembled a powerful indictment of the "PC" culture and the teaching of "multiculturalism" in schools in his 1995 book Dictatorship of virtue. As he and others have observed, multiculturalism favours people on the basis of their race and sex, and so betrays Dr

King's dream of 'a day when my children will not be judged by the colour of their skin but by the content of their character.

Mr Clinton was right to argue on Monday that America cannot afford to fail in its bid for social harmony. However, it is clear that there is a price for success - the loss of considerable freedom of expression — which many citizens are not willing to pay. Describing a way to reconcile those two principles may have been beyond the scope of Monday's speech, but it is perhaps the most important task that now confronts him.

Gore stakes his claim to inherit presidency

FROM TOM RHODES IN WASHINGTON

WHEN Al Gore skipped on to the stage of the Washington Ball in the early hours of yesterday murning, America's Vice-President was unable to contain his excitement as thousands of Democrats chanted Gore in 2000".

The ball, one of 14 "dances" with which the $11 million (£30.5 million) inauguration of President Clinton concluded as the sun rose yesterday, was little more than a political rock concert. It was, however, one of the few occasions during this pageant when Mr Gore was not basking in the reflected glory of the President. Generally robotic, he became unusually animated as he punched the air in a victory salute and danced with his wife. Tipper, and Marion Barry, the Mayor of Washington. An audience, which became visibly less enthusiastic at the entrance of Mr Clinton only half an hour later, was in rapture as the Gores rocked to the sounds of Meat Loaf. The ageing and slab-like American rock star who had just per-lormed But Out of Hell, rushed to greet the Vice-President When Bill and Hilthe microphone. Meat Loaf retired gracefully and did not even clap as the President began his regular patter. Enthusiasm for Mr Gore had been matched at every event, from the parade of military and high school bands and floats to the swearing-in at the Capitol.

There, on the steps of Congress, the Vice-President had in fact briefly tasted the ultimate power. The President's own swearing-in was running late and, for live minutes and forty seconds, Mr Gore assumed the mantle of leader of the Western world.
In Washington, of course, the moment was seen as a sign that he would succeed Mr Clinton in the Oval Office in four years' time. Almost no other President in American history has given such a ringing and early endorsement to a chosen successor. While Mr Gore was left with a worthy but low-profile portfolio for much of the first Clinton Administration, the President has swiftly carved out a significant role for his deputy in the coming months.

Early next month he will play host to Viktor Cherno-

Truth stretched as history is made in the USA

BY NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

INAUGURAL addresses are not designed to be pored over by pedants, but in his brisk review of technological achievements in the United States President Clinton's certainly stretched the rules close to breaking point. He claimed that Americans split the atom and explored the heavens; invented the computer and the microchip". Half of these claims are certainly true. Americans - or at least citizens of the United States - did explore the heavens, and the first microchips were produced in California by Intel.

But the atom was first split in Cambridge in 1919 by Ernest Rutherford, a New Zealander by birth. He bornbarded nitrogen with alpha particles, producing hydrogen and oxygen. Perhaps Mr Clinton meant. nuclear fission rather than transinutation? In that case, the credit properly goes to two Germans, Otto Hahn and Fritz Strassman, and Austrian Lise Meitner, who discovered in 1938 and 1939 that uranium nuclei can be split by neutron bombardment It was Meitner's nephe

Enrico Fermi. The bomb itself owed plenty to emigre Euro-peans working in the United States, although it is often wrongly treated as a purely American achievement.

The computer has an equally tangled history. An Englishman, Charles Babbage, had the idea first in the 19th century, though his machines were mechanical and never completed. During the 1930s Alan Turing, also English, established the theoretical possibility of a "universal computing machine".

The first computers were built in Germany, the United States and Britain. While the American device. ENIAC. was bigger and more power ful than the others, it could not store its own programs. The first computer able to do that was built in Manchester.

President Clinton is not the first to bend technological history to his own advantage. The Soviet Union under Stalin hardly ever acknowledged any inventors but its own, and Baroness Thatcher, when she was Prime Minister, was convinced that genetic engineering had been invented in Britain Nobody had the nerve to tell her that she was confusing recombinant DNA technology with another important technique which was indeed invented in Cambridge - by an Argentinian and rich the first House leader in American history to have been disciplined by his peers and leaves him severely weakened as a political power on Capitol Hill. Only two weeks ago he became the first Republican re-elected to the Speaker's chair in 68 years.

"No one is above the rules," said Nancy Johnson, the Republican chairman of the committee which has investigated the Gingrich affair for two years, The reprimand and penalty came after a highly damning report was issued last week by James Cole, the independent counsel. Mr Cole was investigating whether the Speaker had misused charitable donations for political purposes, According to the report, Mr Gingrich was said to have shown a "disregard and lack of respect" for the standards of conduct expected of his office. A deal was swiftly struck with lawyers from both sides and the Speaker, hoping to minimise political damage to himself, had already agreed to pay the sum and accept the reprimand in advance of last night's vote.

Controversy has been maintained, however, over how Mr Gingrich plans to pay the fine. His lawyer has said that Mr Gingrich will not make a decision on payment for at least a week, sparking immediate criticism from House Democrats who are demanding that the Speaker reimburse the committee from his own pocket.

Joint drive to lure Holy Land tourists after Hebron deal

FROM CHRISTOPHER WALKER IN JERUSALEM

ISRAEL, Jordan and the Palestinian Authority are working together for the first time to capitalise on last week's Hebron agreement to boost tourism to the Holy Land.

Nitsan Ilan, an Israeli official, said that tomorrow leading US newspapers would carry a new advertisment urging Americans to visit the Holy Land under the slogan: "Peace - It's a Beautiful Sight." She claimed it was the first such joint initiative.

After Israel made peace with the Palestine Liberation Organisation in 1993 and with Jordan a year later, it was expected that increased tourism would be a "peace divi-dend" for all parties. But hopes were dashed by suicide bombs last spring, which claimed more than 60 lives in Israel, and subsequent lighting between Israeli troops and Palestinian police in which 75 people died,

Nike mania of Japanese sneaker-snatchers turns to violence

FROM ROBERT WHYM NAT DE TORYO

JAPAN'S sneaker-snatchers struck again yesterday when a 21-year-old man was attacked by a gang of youths and robbed of his valuable training shoes.

The victim made the mistake of strolling at night in Air Max running shoes, made by Nike, a brand so coveted in Japan that some owners keep them locked away and take them out only to admire them. The shoes, with their distinctive air cushions and transparent plastic bubbles in the heels, owe their popularity to a marketing campaign that tapped into a growing interest in black sports stars and musicians.

Television commercials featuring Michael Jordan, the American hasketball star, were highly effective in whetting appetites. When customers - mostly in their teens or early Sorting out your pension is one of those things you've probably been meaning to do for years. So why haven't you got round to it yet?

Perhaps it's because you've been put off by the ြို့ရ thought of having to wade through reams of complicated paperwork, filling in pages of questions on an application form. Or maybe you've always thought you'd got far better things to spend your money on. Well, we have launched the Virgin Personal Pension for people just like you. It's totally understandable, easy to start and we think it's the best value personal pension around. Of course, we don't see it as our job to persuade you to buy a pension from us - that's a decision for you to make. But if you're selfemployed or employed and haven't got a company pension scheme, then why not give us a call to find out more. We can give you as much or as little help as you need in deciding if the Virgin Personal Pension is right for you.

The government offers you massive tax breaks if you save in a personal pension. Each year you put TODAY off taking out a pension, the value of those tax breaks gets smaller and smaller. So the longer you leave it, the harder and more expensive it will be to get the kind of income you want to help maintain your current standard of living when you retire.

So the message is clear - the sooner you get cracking, the better your chances are of retiring comfortably, or even retiring early!

You may be surprised. If you've got £50 or more you can afford to put away each month and are robay sure you won't need to get your hands on the ಿಂದ ್ money until you retire, then you can probably get started straight away. Bear in mind though, that the chances are you may need to increase the amount you save over the years to get the sort of retirement income you want.

CERT EFFORE E DESCRETARION FOR TOWN

'There is a huge gap between what consumers need, and what the pensions industry has to offer. Ten years ago, the government made pensions a fantastic way to save for the future. Presented with this opportunity, the pensions industry let greed get the better of them. The real answer is increased competition. Now that competition exists! ##

Call us and tell us how much you want to tuck away each month and we'll send you a personalised information pack which will contain all the information you need to know. But starting a pension is such a vital decision, you should be choosy about who you buy from. So try phoning a few other companies. Ask them these questions and see how their answers compare:

Louvre 'failed to seek owners of art looted from Jews'

FROM BEN MACINTYRE IN PARIS

FRANCE'S state auditors have accused national museum officials of failing in their legal duty to seek the rightful owners of almost 2,000 artworks stolen from Jews during the Second World War.

The Cour des Comptes, France's hard-hitting public spending watchdog, alleged that for half a century the state-run Musées de France made little or no effort to publicise paintings and sculptures in its collections that had been seized during the Nazi occupation, according to Le

The Louvre holds 1.878 artworks originally belonging to Jews and seized by the Nazis, including works by Renoir, Rodin, Courbet, Monet and Gauguin. The smaller Musée d'Orsay has 85 such nillaged works.

The treasure trove was handed provisionally to the Musées de France after the liberation. Under a law passed in December 1949, the museums are required to publicise their guardianship of the works, try to find out who owned them and arrange for them to be reclaimed.

"In the circumstances, it would be impossible not to report that the State, and in particular the management of the Musées de France, will have failed in its obligation to publicise the works," the auditors said in a letter to museum authorities.

"The State can never become owner of these artworks," it concluded, with the implication that France's museum authorities hoped that, if they did little, the question of ownership would lapse and the works would, in effect, become state property. François Cachin, director of Musees de France, denied the accusations, saying that the two museums did not lay claim to the art and should be considered "simply a place where the works are deposited". M Cachin pointed out that an inventory of the stolen art had been displayed recently on the Internet and that the catalogue would soon be published as a book.

The auditors said, however, that earlier museum administrations should bear the blame for failing to do more to track down the owners of the works. "How could a worrying situation have continued for nearly 50 years without anyone, beginning with the directors of the Musées de France, doing something about it?" the report asked. The auditors pointed out that since 1954 no major effort had been made to publicise the works. An auditors' report will be published at the end of next month, but the section on art stolen from the Jews, oddly. will be omitted, according to Le Figaro.

The allegations that the guardians of France's cultural heritage have been insufficiently energetic in their attempts to return looted paintings comes hard on the heels of claims that properties now owned by the city of Paris may also have been seized from Jews deported to death

A book published last October alleged that Paris City Council still owns 150 build-ings in the Marais district. some of which belonged to Jewish families who never reclaimed them after the war. More than 75,000 Jews were deported from France during the war, with the collaboration of the Vichy regime. David Douvette, the French historian, noted recently that "the looping of Jewish property under Vichy remains, in the France of the 1990s, the ultimate taboo inherited from the

Colonies fight more power for governors

By MICHAEL BINYON DIPLOMATIC EDITOR

BRITAIN'S recent decision to give the governors of its few remaining colonies power to overrule locally elected assemblies has drawn sharp criticism from the Caribbean.

The chief ministers of two dependent territories -- Anguilla and Montserrat - have told Malcolm Rifkind, the Foreign Secretary, that the new law is "immoral" because it shows that Britain is not sincere in encouraging its remaining colonies to stand on their own feet.

Last month Mr Rifkind announced that Britain is to give the governors of live dependent territories in the Caribbean new reserve nowers to amend or overturn locally enacted legislation. The Government insisted that this was not linked to recent worries about drug-smuggling or money-laundering in some island dependencies, but was to avoid "excessive contingent liabilities".

The Foreign Office said that, since Britain was still answerable to international organisations for its remaining dependencies, it wanted to be able to guarantee good government. Nicholas Bonsor. Minister of State at the Foreign Office, told Parliament last month that the changes had been introduced "in the light of recent experience". This was a clear reference to concern about money-laundering in the Caribbean and the dispute last year between the Governor of the Turks and Caicos Islands and locally elected ministers over accusations that drugs were being freely sold in the islands.

Britain insists that the new powers are to be used only in emergencies. Officials in some islands were angry, however. at the implied presumption that locally elected staff might be corrupt. Hubert Hughes, the Chief Minister of Montserrat, said Britain had clearly decided that, if countries were unable to become independent, they should accept greater control from London.

GERMANY and the Czech Republic yesterday made an important step towards ending 50 years of friction over the postwar expulsion of Sude-

Helmut Kohl, the German Chancellor, and Vaclav Klaus, the Czech Prime Minister, signed an accord expressing mutual regret. There seems to be now no real hindrance to Germany asserting its role as the champion of Central Europe within an expanded European Union.

The deal, which will ease Prague's progress towards EU membership, remains controversial. As Herr Kohl arrived for his first visit to an independent Czech Republic, demonstrators from the Czech Communist Party and the ultra-nationalist Republicans launched loud protests, and Germans were broadly satisfied declaring the accord to be a sell-out. Vera · Zezulkova, the Communist Party spokeswoman, said the accord. was no more than a token of German domination over its neighbour. the postwar consequences." In Germany, the leader of the association for expelled Germans. Fritz Neubauer, said: "The open questions have all still to be resolved and this will lead to new conflicts." Above all, the accord did not guarantee the 2.5 million Sudeten Germans the basic right to a homeland nor give hope for restitution of property confiscated after the war. The parliaments of both countries have to ratify yesterday. As Central and East European states are due to begin entry negotiations with the EU, a deal was regarded as imperative.

It was Vaciav Havel, the Czech President, who, within days of becoming leader of the former Czechoslovakia in 1990, first expressed public regret for the expulsion of the Sudeten Germans. He also recognised the importance of Germany in shaping Central Europe.

Germany has been our inspiration as well as our pain, a source of understandable traumas ... as well as of standards to which we turn," he said. "Some regard Germany as our greatest hope, others as our greatest

This careful balance, between the

The German roots are deep high German was the teaching language, along with Latin, at Prague's Charles University when it opened in 1348, German trade in the 1930s helped to modernise Central Europe.

A similar trend is underway as German influence edges out Russia. Officially recorded trade between Poland and Germany is now more than £12 billion. Germany is the biggest single customer for Czech, Hungarian and Polish products. Although Russia has not been abandoned, the orientation of the Central European economy has shifted in six years from East to West — with Germany as the magnet.

Everywhere, the signs of this geo-political shift are visible: in the neon lights advertising German washing-machines, cars and beer, and in the jobs created by German direct investment. In the Czech Republic and Slovakia there are more than 300 German companies employing about 50,000 workers. In part, the German interest reflects the high labour costs

In the 1930s. German commerce raised the standard of Central European manufacturing. A similar process can be observed today. The result is a kind of pragmatic compact: Germans modernised the East in return for a foothold in a huge rediscovered market. That makes it easier to patch up old quarrels.

"ADIEU MORSE." At mid-. night on January 31 the maritime listening post on Brit-tany's coast will stop receiving Morse code messages as France abandons the signal system that has saved countless lives at sea (Ben Macintyre-writes).

France Telecom, the French telecommunications company, has decreed that the code is dead — two years before the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) formally places Sam-uel Morse's invention on technology's scrap heap.

Morse ceased to be required on seagoing ships from 1993, when the IMO introduced the Global Maritime Distress and Safety System. By 1999 it will have been phased out worldwide.

Samuel Finley Breese Morse, an American artist born in 1791, invented his telegraph in 1844 by combining lengths of wire covering the 57 miles between Wash-ington and Baltimore. # Warsaw says it can afford to join Nato

POLAND yesterday took issue with pessimistic American analysts and advisers who are urging President Clinton to step back from his promise to project Nato into Central Europe in the next two years.

A report by the Warsaw-based Euro-Atlantic Associ-ation said Polish entry to the alliance need cost only a fraction of the sums calculated by the US Congressional Budget Office and the Rand Corporation.

Drawing on figures from the Defence Ministry and other government offices, Janusz Onyszkiewicz, the report's chief author, said American estimates of $61 billion (£38 million) for Central European accession were unrealistic. "The genuine cost can be accommodated within Po-land's budget possibilities." Mr Onyszkiewicz, a former Desence Minister, said. The direct cost would be just under $1.5 billion over 15 years with the bulk falling before 2000, the report said. Most of the sum - $1.26 billion would be used for integrating Poland's command structure into the alliance, making communications compatible, en-suring that Eastern and Western air defence systems could work together and modernising military airfields. Mr Onyszkiewicz indicated that exaggerated figures in Washington were an attempt to slow eastward enlargement.

The British in Paris

The staid houses of Givenchy and Dior are appealing to a new kind of customer with the collections from the maverick Brits, says Heath Brown

ritish fashion design is leading the world at the moment, with the two hot names of John Galliano and Alexander McQueen at the forefront. They are making their mark at the Paris haute couture collec-tions this week, where McQueen showed his debut collection for Givenchy and Galliano his for Dior. Many of the foreign press and buyers were hesitant in their praise of these appointments -- worried that such maverick designers would not fit into the staid world of couture.

Already, after Galliano's previous collection for Giventhy (where he designed briefly last year before moving on to Dior) the purchasers of haute couture were beginning to fall away. There were no customers left after last year." says Hale Rubenstein, buyer for Bloomingdales, of the reaction to McQueen's Givenchy show.

There must be a game plan to bring in new customers," he adds. "It's the only way it will carry on." Indeed, a new customer for haute couture, where the dresses can cost up to £40,000, is desperately needed. Only about 2,000 haute couture customers remain. They are among the richest women in the world and they are mostly over 50.

Katy England, creative di-rector of Givenchy, is keen to emphasise that McQueen's head is not in the clouds. She says: "His next own-label col-lection will be totally wearable - good, sharp suits perfect for older woman but in McQueen's signature sithouette."

A new appeal for a different kind of customer is what LVMH (Louis Vuitton Moet Hennessy), the owners of both Dior and Givenchy, had in mind when they appointed such avant-garde designers as Galliano and McQueen. It is not the first time that a controversial appointment has been made in the hope of revitalising an haute couture house. In 1960, when Yves Saint Laurent took over the reins of Dior, there was press acclaim, but also the fear that traditional customers would leave in droves. In fact, he produced a ground-breaking collection, showing leather jeans, polo-neck sweaters and duffel costs in rich, new fabries inspired by the street style of the students of the Rive Garuche. In the context of haute couture at the time, the look was utterly shocking. Saint Laurent went on to introduce the women's turedo - to the horror of some. But his revolutionary ideas were

Wells look like Enid Blyton, political changes that the Tsar, Emperor or Kaiser would never have believed possible, not to mention the little old matter of Global Extinction - and what still exercises us to the very root of our being? Sex. Yours, mine, everybody's."

The Great Molochian God of Carnal Enterprise wants us all to be At It - as successfully as possible — and if we aren't, then something is seriously wrong. Celibacy no longer seems to exist in our lexicon. Basically the absorbing phenomenon of the 20th century is whether or not he is/she is/you are Getting Laid.

At the turn of the century, after Big Ben chimed the hour to usher in 1901. most of the wives (as they nearly exclusively were) who found them-selves being whisked off to bed to begin the New Dawn with a Damn Good Seeing To, went with no expectations.

They were not required to enjoy it. The pleasure of sex was a right solely reserved for their husbands. And their husbands could take it or leave it. If. they wanted to, they did, and if they didn't want to, they read the paper. Of course, dotted among the majority were a few enlightened spirits, but for those few women who did discover the joy of sex that night, it - or rather they came as a nice surprise.

nd then suddenly, out of the murky mists of this New Dawn, ventured enlighten-Iment. The Blessed Marie Stopes, in many respects banking mad and therefore usefully indifferent to hostility, hove into view, dancing like a daisy on the lawn, flowing with classical drapery and looking just like Pandora reincarnate. Which, of course, she was. Because, having pointed out that women need not have sex solely to procreate, she also made the logical connection which has caused us more confusion, more anxiety, than anything ever since — the revolutionary notion that women, other than the likes of Moli Flanders and Peg of Old Drury, had the right to be pleasured, too. But it took us another few decades to get up enough steam to embrace the idea of sexual equality. And we still haven't

Now you can call me a silly little running-dog of reactionary Post-Modernism if you like, but sex in the Sixtles wasn't that revolutionary. The amount of it may have been. In fact, the amount certainly was. But what about the quality? The freedom to do it was as much the turn on as the It itself. Naturally. Because we were still

All gains are losses. Not that I advocate endless pregnancies and no right over our twiddly bits, but where once we women could totter about in our bustles and corsets and not have the worry of whether the earth moved, since Ms Stopes's profound percipience, and the sexual cloudburst of the Sixties, we now totter about in our high heels and Wonderbras flaring our nostrils and trembling inside in case it doesn't. Casual sex? Hahl

And to confound us all even further. the blokes aren't having too easy a time either. The primal urge of the hunter/gatherer with animal tenden-cies and a built-in programme to think about sex every six minutes which has. presumably, taken several thousand years to perfect (and obviously in some cases requires several thousand more). must give way in a mere 30 years to one who will look butch in a pinny, cook, sew, wash, and discuss our PMT on one side of the bedroom door, and then swing from a chandelier emulating a cogo stick and saying Me Tarran on

I could give up novels, and we could both live side by side in mansions in Regent's Park.

This time, when Big Ben chimes the hour of the new century and millennium. there will be a lot of anxious people standing around thinking about the best way to organise the celebratory

The women will be wearing condoms in their hats and wondering if they dare say "How about it" without risking deflation in the pogo stick department because the primal hunter/gatherer hasn't quite understood that he's free of his need to show how bold he is. And quite a lot of the women will secretly sigh for the days when he said "Ugh" and threw you over his shoulder and that was that. The men will either assert themselves by drinking a lot, thereby ending the question anyway. Or they will put their hearts and souls into looking as if they have no expectations and avoid staring at the hat. Either way, there will be a lot of anxiety floating about. The worst bit of all is that everybody else will look as if they have cracked it. You will feel you are the only one on the

And for those of us who thought carnal old Moloch would leave us alone when our teeth started falling out - we must think again. In a recent study on sexuality, it was stated that folk in their sixties and seventies were now having the best sex of their lives. This seems a very positive, not to say mind-boggling, discovery. Especially since I pictured myself fetching up with a rubber hip joint and a hearing aid. somewhere on the South Coast, and being perfectly poisonous to everybody at last. Instead, the voracious Moloch chomps on. Not to let the side down, I must besport a dainty variouse ankle and give the glad eye to some old geezer on the next bench to mine. And he, poor chap, must woggle his dewlaps, set aside his copy of The Oldie, and offer me a good time.

And Oh Lor, what about procedures? In the old days it used to follow that when two people took their glasses off, you knew they meant business now, presumably, the significant moment is when he or she lets the Zimmer frame drop. It puts a whole new courtly meaning on He Fell At My Feet. And. of course, a whole new perspective on Getting Laid.

Women aren't taking men's jobs because they've won the equality battle. It's about cutting costs omen on Too; Why it's better to be a woman: Sometimes it's hard to be a man; Women win battle of the sexes: these are just some recent headlines to stories documenting the upward rise of the female sex. It has become the accepted wisdom of the day that no longer are the odds stacked against us and that, indeed, it is now men - underachiev-ing at school, unwanted in the workplace - who more properly justify the term the second sex. Strange, then. that the report just out from the Equal Opportunities Commission confirms none of this. Far from women having gained supremacy, they - we - haven't even achieved equality. Women still earn, on average, 20 per cent less than their male counterparts and not until the year 2040, it is reckoned, will that gap close.

These are shocking findings, but peculiarly satisfy-ing to read all the same. It is important that we see the facts and are forced to recogmisogynistic picture of women as greedy looters and appropriators of the rights and jobs of men is a false one. The evidence points to the fact that men are still being paid a premium just

Clearly this is wrong. What case could there be to argue for it? And yet there are plenty of people who would be happy to see a greater disparity in men and women's pay: indeed, they would like to see women out of the workplace altogether.

I can understand why certain men should feel that the world would be a better place if women stayed at home while men went out to work. And I have a glimmer of understanding why some women support this view. Men whose supremacy has been questioned are bound to be resentful, and who wouldn't protect their own power base?

The female argument for unequal pay, or so little pay that there could be no incentive to enter the workplace, is superficially different, but essentially the same. Women who regard the office as a male preserve need to feel that the domestic sphere is valued or, more, that they are valued for remaining in and shaping it. Any appreciation of a female workforce feels like a criticism of them: inequality of pay is the last their way of life.

There is, however, some truth in the depiction of women finding employment at the cost of men losing theirs. What people should recognise, though, is that this is a consequence of the unfair pay differential, Em-ployers don't give jobs to women because of some feminist drive or belief in the higher ability of women to get the job done. They do it because it cuts their wages bill. Indeed, many women at the lower end of the scale (the ones working part-time who are earning 58 per cent less than the full-time men doing the same job) may be bizarrely grateful for the inequality

Paying the price for not minding the wage

even as they resent it. Of course, too much attention is always paid to women at the other, loftier, end of the scale. Somehow it is difficult to have sympathy for a female film star who complains that she gets a mere $2 million a movie while her male counterparts are paid three or more times that amount, Nevertheless, it does influence, subliminally, the way we regard all complaints about pay gaps and their pay are just whingers as far as most people are concerned; "lucky to have a job at all is, one deduces, the implication. Implicit also is the notion that by entering the workforce women are taking men's jobs away from them. But only historically is this true. Women may be taking jobs once done by men but that doesn't make any job a man's job. Men do not have any more ngui to em ment than women do, although the fact that they get paid more for doing the same work might seem to suggest that this is indeed the

One might think, though, that it would be impossible for a workforce so unequally renumerated to work together. But while unemployment is high, who is in a position to complain? Besides - apart from those industries which still operate a fixed wage scale - which of us ever knows what the next employee is earning? The demise of unionised labour on the one hand means that more and more salaries are paid according to personal contracts. That is especially true in managerial occupations which incidentally, have a particularly large sex-pay differential. And on the other hand, now that sex is no longer a taboo, money increasingly is. No one dis-cusses what they get paid over here and would rather die than ask what a colleague's salary is.

It is also undeniable that even though society, the way we live our lives, has changed, at the back of our minds is the idea that a man is the breadwinner. He must earn to support a wife and children: women, if they are not selfish careerists hellbent on their own advancement. are otherwise just working for pin money. There couldn't be a mure outdated and economically out-of-focus nicture of how we live now, and yet we seem unable or disinclined to accept that But then, change is always difficult. There is bound to be a lag between reality and the image we have of it. But in the case of pay, it seems that this discrepancy has worked the other way round. We are so convinced that we live in the great post-feminist age (and that's a phrase that should immedately be scrubbed from the language) that we are in danger of overlooking the actual evidence which is that unless we do something about it, it will take another half century for us to achieve the equality that we fondly though erroneously imagine we have long since won.

I AM far from impressed by the idea of the new "future proof" phone, it's not the proposed revision (yet again) of the telephone numbers that exercises me particularly, but the talk that goes with it of our "maintaining our place in the forefront of world telecommunications".

For I have come to the conclusion that we are not temperamentally suited to be any place other than at the very slagheap of world teleevidence Call Waiting. This is a means by which one can tell someone is trying to ring when one is already on the

Welcome to the poll of the century, and goodbye to the century of the poll

have, I do believe, the key to the Great Millennium Exhibition. I even know what that key, shed of metaphor, would look like. It would look like a Yale key. I know this because, if the nation were asked to vote for its favourite key, the Yale would unquestionably come top. It would leave the Chubb and the Ingersoll at the post.

And that is the key to the key: for the key to the Great Millennium Exhibition is vox populi. And since it seems to be generally agreed that what the Greenwich Megadome should contain is the quintessence of Britain, it must surely follow, in these poll-driven times, that it has to be left to the British people to determine what that quintessence is. There must, before the Megadome is topped out, be national referendums about everything it is to enshrine.

This revelation came to me in the small hours of Tuesday morning, when, as so of-ten, I had given up counting sheep in favour of gathering their wool, and it came while I was mulling the curious fact that, a few hours earlier, the British people had elected The Lord of the Rings as their book of the century. I tried to picture someone enjoying it, and suddenly Des Lynam sprang [all right, sauntered] into my mind. It took but a moment to realise why: it was because Des himself had, a month back, been elected by the British as their personality of the century. Who better, then, to place in a snug fireside chair, deep in Middle Earth, accompanied only by the voice of Doris Day trilling Move

Over, Darling — which the British recently voted song of the century — as the core exhibit and icon of Megadome 2000?

But how shall we determine the nature of Des's fireside chair? A poll must be held. It will almost certainly come up with a reproduction Regency wing item in green leather, with distressed buttons. And, of course a matching course for what I am course, a matching poulfe, for what I am sure the British people will decide are Des's Hush Puppies. As for Des's real puppies, who can doubt that some 87 per cent of the population will plump for yellow labradors, and the labradors is the labradors. to match his lavatory paper, itself a landslide victory? What these are romping on, mind, as Des chuckles over his elves, is less guessable: once, it would have been figured Wilton, later a nice shagpile, but the bucolic style is a strong runner these days — cf. Des's log fire, which pulled over 70 per cent of the heating vote — and it could well be that the Megadome will end up with restored floorboards and a scatter of John Lewis oriental trues are if these do git companyed trues are if rugs, even if these do sit somewhat uneasily ably Britain's illumination of choice. Oh, look, Des is reaching for a tasty tithit rom the recently elected oakette table, usefully de-nested beside his chair. Megadome visitors crane to see. Will it be a stick of KitKat or a nibble of Mars? This time ! cannot anticipate, the voting will have been close, there is even an outside chance that a Penguin will sneak up and snatch victory at the wire; one prays only that it does not spoil his appetite (voted Britain's second favourite caution, after "mind how you go") for the Delia Smith steak-and-kidney pud-ding currently simmering in his (solid-fuel) Aga in the Megadome's flagstoned and copper-hung kitchen.

with his nice Anglepoise lamp, unquestion-

I feel some of you growing restless, as 2000 approaches, over what you will see hanging on Des's wall: will it be a Tretchikoff or a David Shepherd? Well, very likely both - unless, between now and then, some sly opportunist knocks up a green-faced woman riding an elephant, especially if he throws in a couple of gleaners for good measure.

And has Des been voted a car? He has: beyond his multioned window (through which, at every hour on the hour, the hologrammed face of dear Eric Morecambe will pop, asking Des to bring him sunshine), the British people's most cherished motor sits in the rose-girt drive. It is a Morris Minor. Very soon now. Des will put down Tolkien, turn off Doris, wind the carriage clock which beat its grandfather only after a recount, and drive across the Megadome to a thatched pub with a big blonde barmaid and a shoveha'penny board for a pint of lukewarm bitter and a Smith's Original crisp. He will not, however, stay long. He must get back for an early dinner. Because tonight, as every night, Des has tickets for The Mousetrap.

Give charity a chance

lowly the fog begins to thin.

From its depths we see dark shapes of things to come. There looms the gaunt visage of Gordon Brown. Round him chatter dwarfs — Blunkett, Smith, Harman, Straw tugging at his purse. Over them worries a wizard covered in glitter, his face a ric-tus smile. We mortals thought we knew it all. We stumble blinking from the grim Nineties to be told of a land of bright promise ahead. Yet what horror do these creatures of the fog foretell? They are not true Hobbits.

Which brings me to social services privatisation. On Friday of each week, spindoctors fan out from the party headquarters to tell the Sunday papers what to print. Last Friday the Tory doctors told them to print a story about how the last bastions of the welfare state, old people's and children's care, were to be kicked out of the public sector. Ministers still had red blood in their veins, a White Paper would be published and blue water out between the parties. The papers duly printed this rainbow tale.

They also printed Labour's instant denunciation. The relevant dwarf. Chris Smith, derided this "clapped-out ideology". He condemned those who could savage the "most vulnerable in our society". Destitute women, orphans and the disabled, he implied, were to be thrown to the wolves of private profit. At last, thought Mr Smith, here was a socialist bone on which he could chew. Yet between breakfast and dinner, somebody got at Mr Smith. By Sunday the policy was transformed. It would be looked at pragmatically. No option was being rejected, only a "central diktat". Was Mr Smith outraged? No. Was he all sweet reason? Of course. What changed Mr Smith was the rattling chains and the clanking fetters of Mr Brown. Mr Brown is already the embodiment of "the Treasury view". He is more than Chancellor-in-waiting. He is jailer of the demon of "tax-and-spend", whose escape his colleagues are always trying to effect. Sub-contracting personal social services for the elderly and children is likely to save money. It might recoup as much as £2 billion a year if forcefully implemented. If it upsets the unions and en-rages the Left, too bad - or so good. In British public administration, some policies are born dull, some achieve dullness and some (such as Europe) have dullness thrust upon them. Personal social services are all three. They em-body Bagehot's dictum that good govThe most vulnerable among us, the old and the young, need to be freed from the dead hand of the welfare state

ernment aspires to the state of tedium. They are a backwater of a backwater. Even VAT regulations sparkle compared with residential and domiciliary care for the elderly and young people. These services may employ a quarter of a million people in England and Wales. They may cost £8 billion, the equivalent of 4p on income tax. But they are about the incontinent old, the retarded young. the incurable, the uncontrollable, the unthinkable. We wish to fund them and forget. We want them to be dull.

When in the 1980s Margaret Thatcher pressed the welfare state to go out to tender, she meant refuse collection, school buses, street-cleaning and hospital laundries. The result has been generally successful. Prices fell, efficiency rose and many a lucrative union racket was smashed. Labour has no pledge to rescind the policy. In 1993, the same was supposed to happen to old people's homes. A target was set of 85 per cent of places to be privately provided. Only 46 per cent has been achieved. As for children in care, 60 per cent are privately fostered, but almost all the rest are in local council homes.

Some of these institutions are admirable and efficient. Some are not witness yesterday's revelations about childcare in Clwyd. There may be nothing peculiarly unsaintly about a public-sector home, but there is something peculiarly inefficient. The annual report of the Department of Health shows unit costs in the public sector rising steadily ahead of inflation. New figures apparently also show that costs in the private sector are roughly 20 per cent lower than in the public. In addition, as one scandal after another testifies, local council homes are not independently inspected. They are truly out of sight and out of mind.

Nobody is calling for the State to abandon responsibility for the vulnerable young and old. From the foundling hospital to the great charitable asylums.

the voluntary sector served the nation well. Today, "caring" is a central function of the welfare state. But to care does not mean to provide. A service can be stipulated, purchased and monitored. He who pays the piper can call the tune, but he need not play the pipe.

We now know that the rot of child abuse that Dickens exposed in the unregulated charitable sector can spread largely undetected through the public sector. The account given yesterday by the former social services director of Clayd was a harrowing instance of "producer capture". Here was a uniondominated service on which nobod dared blow the whistle Care of the vulnerable is itself vulnerable. It attracts both the best and the worst of human characteristics. A child in care now has. depending on the area, between £150 and £300 a week spent on him or her. This is more than all but the very wealthiest families spend on a child. The State is entitled to value for money. Small wonder that officials charged with spending such sums want to see thein go to homes run by friends and party colleagues. Small wonder that they prefer fostering to adoption, because fostering keeps children under their control and the money flowing. (The stifling of adoption in Britain by local political activists is costly and cruel, both to children and to prospective parents.)

ost Tory reforms have been hostile to diversity in public service. Schools, hospitals, clinics, libraries and police stations all now operate under centralised regimes unthinkable 20 years ago. Local government is disempowered, and scope for innovation has been diminished. But one reform has undoubtedly energised local govern-ment competitive tendering of non-personal services. Streets are cleaner and rubbish is better collected as a result.

Personal services have proved more delicate: The care of the elderly, the mentally disabled and children without families is unlikely to be a popular candidate for selling to a French water company or American entrepreneur. Allowing people to profit from taxes paid for the care of the elderly is not an appealing prospect — except under the most tightly monitored contracts. What is attractive is the opening this policy.

offers to the chartenble sector.

The voluntary principle that begat Barnado's 1/2 homes was a good one. There is no evidence that the State has any unique competence in taring far children without families. The veget charity was once applied to the noblest human emotion. In the 1960s is was turned into a smear word to justify the

Neither charity nor its bent sister "the public service ethos" has fared well under the linancial hierarchies beloved of Thatcherite ministers Only one police chief, Hampshire's John Hoddinott, refused to sign the Home Office's odious payment by results bonus scheme, protesting that a public servant should need no bathe to work his best. The proposal to put old people's services and childcare out to render is gamble, a gamble with the nation's charity and its chos of public service.

The gamble is honourable. It is a truth widely acknowledged that people of more about their fellow monaris when doing so voluntarily, even unpaid. They may need sensitive selection, supervision, equipment and inspection. But Britain's editing volunteer services, such as the lifeboats and the Samaritans, are exemplars. The charitable instinct is inherent in the concept of a strong community. It leads to the forming of associations. Adam Smith's bonds of sympathy, compassion and fellow feel ing", de Tocqueville's bedrocks of democracy. Community has had a bleak time under the Tomes. Perhaps its hour has come in this worthy cause. The enthusiast for local democracy must learn to separate sheep from goats. Personal social services are not like roads or schools or planning, where political questions ought to be decided by election. They are national services, best purchased locally and best provided privately. Labour's second thoughts of this were better than its first.

A Cabinet seat for Europe

Will Blair will set up a new ministry,

asks Sue Cameron

If Tony Blair makes it to Downing Street this spring he may well find on his desk a Whitehall brief arguing the case for a new "Department for Europe". Five years ago, the file prepared for Neil Kinnock included such a proposal, but it was shelved when Labour lost the election. Now, with campaigning under way in earnest, officials are looking at the idea again as they prepare advice for possible new ministers. This time the need for a radical rethink about how the British government machine deals with Europe is far more urgent.

The dithering and disunity of politicians is causing Whitehall itself to falter. Civil servants are being pressurised on all sides. At home their political masters and their putative political masters in the Labour Party are bickering and backtracking over Europe. Once it would not have mattered to Whitehall, for officials were able to take a long view of Brussels and all its works. No longer. Tony Blair makes it to Downing of Brussels and all its works. No longer.

Today other leading members of the EU are stepping up the pace, setting tight deadlines, pressing for answers. The meeting this month between John Major and Wim Kok, Prime Minister of The Netherlands, which currently holds the EU presidency, showed that Britain's partners are determined to push ahead with a new treaty in Amsterdam this June. For British officials there is no escape. As the Conservative MEP Gra-ham Mather puts it: "Suddenly Europe has become a red-hot-coals job for Whitehall civil servants, and there's no-where for them to hide. The problem is that Whitehall hasn't re-engineered itself to cope with Europe and the fact that today all the wicked issues are European - from mad cows to economic and monetary policy."

Mr Mather is among those who believe Britain needs a Department for Europe headed by a Cabinet minister and with its own permanent secretary and subject specialists. Adherents of the idea — inside and outside Whitehall — say that if Britain is to get to the heart of Europe then we must have a department to spearhead such a drive and to act as a focus for European policy.

More significantly, they insist that if Britain wants to balt further integration. of the EU nations, the need for a They stress that only a department with growth of union co-operatives. Not real cloud inside the government mach-charity but a right was the slogan. It inc can stop what some set as a applied in actial benefits but should be should be stop wave lapping over never have applied to social services. In government departments. The way to negotiate a multi-speed Europe, they claim, is to have a single, co-ordinating department dedicated to achieving that.

> There is already a unit in the Cabinet Office charged with the pob of cocordinating Whitehall's response to Europe in crucial matters such as the inter-governmental conference. It is well regarded — not least by continental civil servants — and could form the nucleus of a new department. There is also a Minister for Europe, but David Davis, the current holder of the post, is not in the Cabmet. He is therefore outranked by all Cabinet ministers in Britain and also by his opposite numbers in France and Germany. Michele Barnier, the French.
> Minister for Europe, is of Cabinet rank,

> Michael Heseltine, the Deputy Prime > Minister, whose pleas to Tory Euro-sceptics to stop bickering were rebuffed on Monday, has called for a Cabinet-fault minister for Europe. In his book The Challenge of Europe - Can Britain Win?, he says such a post would "en-hance partiamentary accountability while going some way to remedy the weakness of departmental ministers who are available only part-time for their European responsibilities. It is a party he has not acted on his theory.

Opposition to the treation of a Department for Europe will come from some Foreign Office people who fear it would diminish their empire. The For-eign Secretary, whether the Tory Mal-colm Rilkind or Labour's Robin Cook, is likely to fight the idea for precisely that reason. Yet there is a halfway house. Over at the Treasury, the Chief Secretary has Cabinet rank, although there is no doubt that the Chancellor of the Euchequer is the boss. A new Department, for Europe could be kept under the segis of the Foreign Office with its Cabinet and minister deferring ultimately to the Foreign Secretary. Britain experimented with such a sys-tem when Lord Carrington was Foreign Secretary and Sir Ian (now Lord) Calindur spoke on foreign affairs as a Calings rumister in the Commune:

Action to prime the government machine on Europe is urgently needed. If would be unkind to suggest that parts of Whitehall are in a blue funk about Europe, but it might be accurate. Officbeing drawn willy-nilly into the political battle over Europe — so much so that some are nervous of fighting Britain's corner as hard as they might over breadand hutter matters.

Others are said to be so fearful of Eurosceptic MPs accusing them of the MPs accusing them of the secret schemes for joining single cirrency that they are not patting enough effort into the prudent and necessary contingency plans.

Whatever political decisions are taken about the EU after the election, a Department for Burope would help to concentrate the minds of ministers and officials. It would encourage an end to the paralysis gripping our politicians and lend a new robustness to Britain dealings with its EU partners. That is something that both Europhobes and Europhiles might welcome

AT THE Evening Standard, they were mourning the resignation of their literary editor Andrew (A.N.) Wilson on the eve of the Whitbread Book of the Year Award. He is leaving to write novels.

Claims that he fell out with the Editor, Max Hastings, a man happiest on a rough shoot in the wilds of Ireland, after being forced to review angling books and tales of country pursuits are scotched by Hastings himself. "It's very sad that he's decided to resign after seven years, but he's going to carry on writing for us," he says. "If there was any acrimony about this, I doubt he would be planning to spend the weekend with me which he is." Hastings would not be drawn on a successor, but Miriam Gross, the longstanding literary editor of The Sunday Telegraph, is being mentioned.

ANYONE who thought President Clinton had given up on Northern Ireland may have been surprised to find two Ulstermen attending his inauguration by personal invitation. John McCaffrey, the director of development at the University of Ulster, and David Kitchen, the director of university programmes, say they were flown over as guests of Bill, whom they met during his visit to Belfast in 1995. "We've had good tickets and we've been hanging out with the President's stepsister," said Kitchen. No matter that no one recalls Clinton having a stepsister.

GERMANY LOOKS EAST

But Central Europe should not take its commitment for granted

The ghost of Munich was finally laid to rest yesterday, with the formal signing in Prague of a joint declaration by Hehnut Kohl and Vaclay Klaus, the Czech Prime Minister, to cement the postwar reconciliation between Germany and the Czech Republic. In the accord, Germany expressed "sorrow" at the Nazi occupation and the Czechs "regretted" the expulsion after the Second World War of 25 million Germans from the Sudetenland. Herr Kohl also promised to support Czech membership of the European Union. The accord is intended to end one of the bitterest legacies of Hitler's aggression, remove the last barrier to German influence in Mitteleuropa and speed the entry of Germany's eastern neighbours into the European Union. Yet all three hopes may yet be disappointed; and Eastern Europe has reason to fear a new betrayal.

The courage and vision of Herr Kohl and Mr Klaus are not in question. Both men were determined to seek an accommodation despite flerce domestic opposition. Neither received in full what he wanted. And both know that the resentment of the German expellees as well as the Czechs who lost families and property during the German occupation will continue to poison domestic politics and public sentiment. Neither was fully able to acknowledge guilt at whathappened; talk of "sorrow" and "regret" will still look mealy-mouthed to those who remember what took place on Czechoslovak

Yet the accord does, at last, allow Germany to restore its political and cultural influence to an area where over the centuries it has played a generally determining role. This influence can already be seen on the ground; since the collapse of communism, German firms, capital, exports and knowhow have moved in to take full advantage of the new markets in Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

Germany is by far the biggest market for East European industries struggling to at the negotiating table.

break out of the stifling constrictions of the old Comecon framework. Given the slug-gish response from other Western capitals and the failure of industry in countries such as Britain to respond to the yearning of the newly liberated peoples to be reconnected. spiritually and economically, to the West, this comes as no surprise. Bonn simply filled the vacuum which had been left by the departing Russians. For many in Germany's hinterland, the investment by Volkswagen, the neon lights advertising German washing machines, the beer and foodstuffs from Bavaria, the training opportunities and weekend tourist trips are welcome. Inevitably, German industrial habits, the German language and the German vision of the new Europe have swept in with the consumer tide.

But not all economists or politicians are without reservations. They do not want to swap dependency on Moscow for Berlin, Above all, they are not convinced, despite warm words in Bonn, that Germany is as zealous in promoting their interests within the EU as it is in furthering its own interests

The crucial demand of Budapest, Warsaw and Prague is for access to EU markets, especially for their farm products. And Germany has shown that it is far from championing the cause of the EU applicants. Appeasing the demands of inefficient farmers in Bavaria sways decision-making in

There has been a clear retreat in Germany from a commitment to the earliest possible EU entry of the Central Europeans, with emphasis instead on consolidating monetary and political integration among the present members. Already, Eastern Europeans fear Nato backsliding over fast entry into the Atlantic alliance. Nothing would be crueller than to encourage them to prepare for EU membership while holding up their exports at the frontier and their aspirations

STILL IN WAITING

The perils of appearing to be already in power

It is Opposition parties who are supposed to endure humiliation. Their Shadow Foreign Secretaries are mistaken for ambassadors by American Presidents. Their spokesmen work in cubbyholes, with a researcher, a shared secretary and a dog. They lament the lack of media coverage for their policies. And they have to rely on the Tube to take them to fashionable parties.

So it must be amusing for Labour Party leaders to experience the tables being turned. Last week's wrangling over the Millennium Exhibition, for instance, had the Deputy Prime Minister, Michael Heseltine, visiting Tony Blair's office to request the Labour leader to support the Millennium Commission's plans for Greenwich. This had all the ingredients that Mr Blair's spin-doctors could have wished for: the public was left with the impression that Labour was merely awaiting the summons to govern in a few months' time.

Then yesterday, at the launch of a report by top businessmen that broadly backed Labour's policies, Mr Blair had another chance to embarrass Mr Heseltine. The Deputy Prime Minister, having first declined an invitation to attend the launch, had. asked if he could come after all once he saw. how much publicity the event would generate for Labour. Mr Blair joked that he would have to resort to the new stalking laws if the Deputy Prime Minister followed him to Amsterdam on Friday.

This is all good knockabout stuff. And the Government has clearly contributed to the public's perception of Labour as a government-in-waiting. With a tiny majority, the Tories' discipline has become ragged, and they govern at the mercy of events: last night's health vote saw fierce builying by the whips. Labour likes to boast of the changed policies that it has achieved even in opposition: reduced VAT on fuel, stalking and paedophile Bills, a Bill on combat knives; and greater supervision of police

But Mr Blair still has to win an election before he can govern the country. Labour does not assume power from the Conservatives this year as if it were Luxembourg taking over the presidency of the European Union from The Netherlands. If business leaders are queueing up to back the Opposition, they are doing so on the balance of probabilities. As any bookmaker knows, a racing certainty can easily be defeated.

Mr Blair must be assuming that, once momentum builds up behind a party, it can attract voters who want to be associated with the winning side. And, when a party has been out of office for 18 years, there is clearly a benefit to be gained from looking ready for government. But there is a countervailing effect too. Britons are famously sympathetic to underdogs; and equally intolerant of presumption.

The line between looking prime ministerial and seeming complacent is very thin. Mr Blair rightly tells his party that voters should not be taken for granted. He would not be human if he did not secretly revel in the attention and approbation which is being showered upon him by former foes. But he should be careful not to let it show too

WAR OF THE GREENS

Vegetables can be interesting, but are not the only virtuous food

Parents are said to have lost the battle over what children eat. Yesterday's report from Strathchyde University asserts that new generations of children are being exposed to a greater risk of cancer because they are bullying their parents into letting them eat whatever they want. The report is interpreted as an indictment of official healthy eating campaigns. It criticises schools for letting pupils pick junk food. And it asserts that Christmas lunch is the only meal in the year at which children receive an adequate intake of vegetables. This assertion begs the broccoli of whether children consider Brussels sprouts and parsnips to be edible vegetables in the strict acceptance of both terms.

Now it is obvious that parents (and nannies in households that have them) exercise less tyrannical authority over the table than once they did. This is one of the few areas of their lives that children control, because they have the power to refuse to eat. And there is statistical evidence that people, including children, are growing fatter. especially in the Western world, especially in the United States, especially in the poorer families. Anecdotal evidence suggests that children live on crisps and sweets, cereals and spaghetti rings. And Economist figures for 1997 show that household consumption of fresh green vegetables has fallen from 406 grammes per person per week to 245 grammes 30 years later. So the old tribal exhortation to eat up one's greens, accompanied by vague threats, no longer simply falls on reluctant ears. It is not even uttered.

But parents have always projected their fears and obsessions on their children. And our current dietary fads stem partly from the admirable modern craze for healthy living, and partly from folk memories of war and rationing. But today's diet experts who live off the fat of the land would disapprove of previously approved British regimes of fortifying bread and dripping and suet puddings. Greens and other vegetables contain vitamins, nutrients and roughage essential to healthy growth. But then so do plenty of other foods now available. During the same period in which the statisticians find that average consumption of fresh green vegetables declined, consumption of fresh fruit and frozen vegetables rose sharply. (This latest research into children's diets was funded by a frozen food company and the Cancer Research Campaign.) Supermarketing has brought to the shelves vegetables that were considered exotic weeds a generation ago, and keeps them there through every season. Modern cooking has found tastier recipes for vegetables than boiling them to pulp. And salads of a variety undreamt of a generation ago are a favourite dish - of teenage girls at least.

The human body is a magnificently adaptable machine. Provided that the body is kept active, a naturally healthy hunger will usually find a healthy diet. So the changing fads of the experts should always be taken with a pinch of salt. And children should be encouraged to develop their own tastes. These could well include vegetables.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I Pennington Street, London EI 9XN Telephone 0171-782 5000

took UK into EEC

From Mr Norman Lamont. MP for Kingston-upon-Thames (Conservative)

Sir, Sir Edward Heath's letter (January 18; see also letters, January 21) is unconvincing. In 1972, Sir Geoffrey Howe, then the Solicitor-General responsible for taking the European Communities Bill through the House,

Let us remind ourselves of the original Treaties of Rome and Paris. They set out essentially, to establish a "Common Market". It is this bosically simple economic concept — the establishment of a single market, a single trading area throughout Europe — that is at the heart of the Community.

There was not much mention here of a directly elected Parliament, a European passport. European citizenship or a single currency.

The 1971 White Paper stated: "There is no question of any erosion of essential national sovereignty." It did go on to say that the EEC involved "a sharing and enlargement of national sov-ereignties". Thus the White Paper gave the impression of defending national sovereignty to disguise the true position, and enable its advocates to assert that only inessential sovereignty was being handed over.

It is completely misleading to say that sovereignty is being enlarged; "pooling" national sovereignty selfevidently means it is being given away. No wonder ordinary people lose patience with such sophistry and feel betrayed.

Sir Edward Heath seems to confuse sovereignty with power. They are not the same thing. Sovereignty is the freedom to make your own laws for your own people through your own parliament. That right is being rapidly eroded and on a scule certainly never revealed to the British people in the early 1970s.

Yours faithfully, NORMAN LAMONT, House of Commons. January 21.

From Lord Beloff

Sir, By quoting from a silly little book I wrote as a cloistered don nearly 30 years ago, Professor Bogdanor (letter. January 21) has proved that I once held the same foolish views as Sir Edward Fleath.

The difference is that observation of the European and world scene over the intervening period has led me to repent of my folly: Sir Edward remains mired in his.

Yours truly. BELOIT. House of Lords. January 21.

From Mr J. A. Davis

Sir, Lord Beloff's view (letter, January 15) is that there was a positive intention, at the time Britain joined the Common Market, to secure our participation in a federal or "superstate". and that this was due to pessimism in a section of the British elite about our ability to operate as a successful nation state.

The essentially federal nature of the EEC and the aspiration of the original members to press on to ever greater unity had been on public display for over 20 years before we joined, as Sir Edward Heath has made clear. The European Court of Justice had proclaimed the supremacy of Community law two years before we joined. It has taken, so it seems, a further 20 years for us to wake up to what we did.

When one considers what that says about the honesty and competence of the mother of Parliaments and the alermess of what is supposed to be one of the most sophisticated electorates in the world, it rather suggests that that pessimism was totally justified.

I was not deceived and voted to come out in 1975. I would not repeat that mistake today.

Yours faithfully. J. A. DAVIS, 54 Woodlands Road. Bookham, Surrey. January 18.

From Mr Patrick Howard

Sir. Sir Edward Heath dismisses Lord Beloff's fear that "policies dreamed up elsewhere" could ruin the livelihoods of many UK citizens by citing the UK's achievement in having the best employment record in the Union. I would maintain that this has been achieved only through our opting out of Union policies on the ERM, the social chapter and the minimum wage.

Yours faithfully. PATRICK HOWARD. 37 Ennerdale Road, Kew, Richmond, Surrey.

Aims of those who Rail privatisation 'a costly mistake'

From the General Secretary of the RMT

Sir. It is to be expected that Secretary of State Sir George Young (letter, Jan-uary 17) would claim railway privatis-ation is working, but it is ironic that on the day he makes claims about increased investment we learn that for the second time in a month John Swift, the Rail Regulator, has been forced to criticise Railtrack for underinvestment in maintenance (report, Business News).

In its half-year accounts Railtrack identified £760 million of backlog work in vital station/property maintenance but had spent just £11 million. It is still spending considerably less on day-to-day track/signalling mainte-nance than the £800 million a year it claimed was necessary in 1995, just to

Sir George refers to "investment commitments". These do not amount to actual spending as Railtrack proves. The Secretary of State says that "a billion pounds [will be spent] over 10 years" (ie, £100 million a year) in replacing and refurbishing rolling stock. To put this in perspective, Department of Transport statistics show that over the last decade of public ownership the Conservative Government spent on average £275 million a year on rolling stock. Even if additional investment in new rolling stock is forthcoming it will be far too late to save the UK-based rolling-stock in-

Support for the privatised railway this financial year is likely to be £1.760 million. By 2000 Opraf, the rail franchiser, forecast last November that support will have fallen to £1.260 million. In the last year of the integrated railway, 1993-94. BR received £1.073 million, including grant from Passenger Transport Executives. Can we afford any more success of this kind?

Despite an increase in grant of 60 per cent there is just no evidence of real improvements in services. Much of the data on timekeeping, for example, is spurious. Yet, there can be little doubt that the old integrated railway, given these additional resources. would have provided substantial, long-term improvements.

Far from being a "modest success" (leading article, January 13) railway privatisation is already proving to be a very costly mistake.

Yours sincerely, JAMES KNAPP, General Secretary, National Union of Rail. Maritime & Transport Workers, Unity House, Euston Road, NWI.

Banking on pay of £1 million a year

From Mr Paul Ashton

Sir. William Rees-Mogg claims (article, January 20) that Nicola Horlick. the [] million-a-year bank employee. was "almost certainly worth a great deal more to the bank than they were paying her". This is based on his assumption that perhaps 5 per cent of the capital value of the bank, equal to £75 million, might be attributed to Mrs Horlick's "personal contribu-

Such unscientific, if not bogus, calculations about the worth of an individual's contribution to the profitability of an organisation are frequently used to justify enormous salaries and bonuses. They are meaningless because they assume, in my view quite wrongly, that the organisation could not employ someone else who would perform at least as well for, say, half the financial reward.

Over-inflated salaries and bonus rates exist purely because of the self-interest of fellow-executives, who know that by suggesting them they will benefit too. Entrepreneurs who risk all they have deserve high rewards: salaned employees are worth no more than the lowest amount an equally skilled and productive person would accept to do the job.

Public grief From Mr Ronald Thwaites, QC

Sir, I wholeheartedly agree with Sir Anthony Beaumont-Dark (letter, January 14) that it is time for a return to restraint and decency in the treatment of the families of the victims of crime. It has become routine to see dishevelled and visibly emotional relatives of recently murdered victims and lost children paraded before a posse of journalists and TV cameras by the police in an appeal for witnesses to come forward. First, that is not the job of the bereaved. Second. it is unlikely that they are thinking clearly enough to be able to make a rational decision about the wisdom of taking part in such spectacles. Third, they cannot contribute anything other than their tragic demeanour to the investigation of the case. Fourth, what price sensitivity to their feelings?

Do the police believe that we as a nation have become so hardened that we have become immune to the daily diet of horrors that take place; or that we cannot imagine the grief of the parents for their dead children, or spouses for their dead partners, without seeing it for ourselves; or that it is now expected that the bereaved practise their grief in public before witnesses are persuaded to come forward? Have we become such a sick and callous society?

Yours faithfully, RONALD THWAITES, 10 King's Bench Walk, Temple, EC4. in the City, I cannot say; but it does seem to me that fund managers are in a position to have a one-way bet at their clients' expense. What they win on the swings in their lucky years, they do not have to pay back on the roundabouts, when fortune (or skill) deserts them. They are fortunate to be paid millions for placing the bets.

Conflict over Chief Rabbi's gesture

From Mr Barry Hyman

Sir. Your editorial, "A brother's hand" (January 18), praising Rabbi Jonathan Sacks's intention to attend the memorial meeting for Rabbi Hugo Gryn on February 20 will sadly make no impression on, and almost certainly be unread by, those trightened people who oppose the arrangement.

To the many thousands of us who have already paid tribute to Rabbi Gryn at his funeral or the subsequent memorial service, the presence of Rabbi Sacks at a secular gathering is a matter of some indifference. It is nonetheless a belated conciliatory ges-ture, for which he is to be congratulated, particularly when one sees the wrath it engenders against him from the ultra-orthodox Jewish community from which I exclude the vast majority of modern British observant United Synagogue Jews. They were mostly no less distressed by Rabbi Sacks's absence from Rabbi Gryn's funeral than Reform Jews, as the Jewish Chronicle's letters page showed at

Sadly the Jewish community, now numbering less than 300,000, still contains people whose capacity to revile their co-religionists defies belief. An ultra-orthodox rabbi recently condemned, in a radio interview, a nonorthodox group as "criminals and sinners, creating mamzerim (illegitimate children) for ten generations. This is the sort of self-destructive invective which faces Rabbi Sacks each time he makes any sort of gesture towards non-orthodox Jews.

Yours faithfully. BARRY HYMAN, 4 Priory View. Bushey Heath, Hertfordshire. January 18.

From Mr Richard Bacon

Sir, Rabbi Hugo Gryn was a good and wise man who touched many people beyond his own faith. Those who profoundly disagreed with him on theological questions might reflect on what the Chief Rabbi said in his 1990 Reith lectures:

To have faith in God as creator and ruler of the universe is to do more than to believe that God has spoken to us. It is to believe that God has spoken to others, in a lang-uage which we may not understand.

radio and television light entertainment producer. died on January 20 aged 72. He was born on May 1, 1924.

s the producer of such landmark pro-Goon Show. Hanmck's Half-Hour, and Till Death Us Do Part, Dennis Main Wilson created a standard for radio and television omedy which has never been surpassed. He strongly he-lieved that you can never teach people how to write comedy. It's a gift, and the most that a producer can do is create the right atmosphere, a corporate greenhouse in which genuine talent can flourish. This was a selfeffacing account of his contrabutton.

Among those whose talents he nurtured were such writers as Spike Milligan, Ray Gelton; and Alan Simpson, Marty Feldman and Johnny Speight, as well as some of the greatest comedy performers of our time — Tony Hancock, Kenneth Williams, Harry Secombe, Peter Sellers, Jimmy Edwards, Warren Mitchell, Dandy Nichols and Una Stubbs.

For most of his professional life he worked for the BBC, and he had no doubts about its place in British society: "It should never be a guardian of public morals, nor does it exist to patronise its licence-payers from an imaginary great height. It should be the nation. speaking to itself." His ownproductions always had a sharp connection with social and political reality.

He was born in Dulwich, the son of an engineer, and won a scholarship to a grammar school in Lewisham. After a period as a wartime evacuee in Tunbridge Wells, where he developed a talent for languages, he briefly joined the BBC's European Service at the age of 17, knowing that he would soon be conscripted into the Armed Forces. His temporary radio work lasted for a year, and as a production assistant he joined a unit making satirical propaganda programmes, including a comedy series in German. located in Bavaria. in 1942 he was conscripted into the Royal Armoured Corps and a few months later, after a successful War Office selection board, he went to Sandhurst and was commissioned into the Armoured Cavalry. He served in North Western Europe after the Normandy landings, and in 1945, was seconded to the Control Commission for Germany.

There he became head of light entertainment for Nordwestdeutscher Rundfunk, based in Hamburg, whose Controller was Hugh Carleton

the age of 23 he joined the permanent staff of the BBC in the radio variety department, where his first assignment was to find new talent. Most of those he discovered were inevitably ex-servicemen. He auditioned Bob Monkhouse, admired Peter Seilers at the Windmill Theatre, met Tony Hancock at the Nuffield Forces Centre, and at Jimmy Grafton's pub he was introduced to the Goon gang. He started Opportunity Knocks-with Hughie Green, and launched the George Mitchell passion for new writers and artists and his ability to reflect their talents in programmes that were both popular and revolutionary:

The first episode of The Goon Show was transmitted in May 1951 and the opening series ran for 17 episodes. A provocative series, full of fun. satire, and fantasy, it was accepted after many bureaucranic wrangles, a situation with which Dennis Main Wilson soon became familiar. It perfectly reflected his ability as a producer to combine the talents of authors and nerformers, and to express them creatively by the imaginative use of the latest broadcasting techniques. His belief in the importance of the scriptwriter any form was always, for contribution to radio was his - The Goon Show owed much

IN HIS work on the prose writings of the 9th and 10th centuries, James Cross made it finally impossible to think of the literary life of Anglo-Saxon England as being somehow divorced from the mainstream Latin-based medieval culture of the Continent. In particular, through his studies of the homilies of Aelfric, he demonstrated that Old English prose owed both its fluency and the range of its reference to Christian Latin authors from as early as St Augustine in the 5th century, and to Irish Christian authors of even earlier date.

major study of Old English literature. Rather, his impact was through a steady stream of articles which progressively illuminated the recesses of his subject. In this process, students at Liverpool University, where he was Baines Professor of English Language from 1965 to 1985, were much the gainers. His tenure of the chair transformed Anglo-Sax-on studies at Liverpool University, where his infectious enthusiasm and honesty were evident not only in his commitment to Anglo-Saxon studies, but also to Old Norse and the Middle English period, on all of which he lectured memorably. Cross's reputation was aninternational one. Even after his retirement his output of scholarly articles remained undiminished. Only last year a symposium was held in his honour at the University of Michigan,

Cross published ten books and nearly a hundred papers. It was his nature to want to get the results of his researches into print as soon as possible rather than to wait for them to gestate to become a magnum opus. This made him an exciting head of department, since the results of his researches were always immedlately available to fertilise thought on the subject. There was very much a work-inprogress quality about his output, and this was highly stimulating to those around

His 65th birthday was marked by the production of a festschrift by scholars from Britain, the Continent and the United States, where by that time he had acquired an immense reputation. Retirement from the Baines Chair saw no diminution in his output. Among his "retirement" projects were (in col-laboration with Tom Hill at Cornell) Solomon and Saturn and Adrian and Ritheus, annotated collections of Anglo-Saxon lure; the Copenhagen Wulfstan Collection (with Jennifer Tunbergj for the Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile series; the Americanbased Sources for Anglo-Soxon Literary Culture and the British-based Fontes Anglo-Saxonici, as well as a continuing flood of papers. A month before his death he had published two more editions of Old English texts and he had further editing projects in the pipeline.

He developed his department of neurosurgery with characteristic energy and, with the appointment of a second full-time neurosurgeon, the late lain Roberts, it became a regional neurosurgical centre for the North West Thames Region. This centre continued to flourish for nearly twenty years after his retirement in 1905 and was then transferred as a complete unit to Charing Cross Hospital, where it remains.

During his long retirement he had no difficulty in occupying his active, inquiring mind and his skilled hands. He was an ardent gardener both at his home in Ealing and his cottage in Hertfordshire. He was educated privately and at Trinity Codlege, Cardindge, but his degree of LL D came from Edinburgh.

In 1918 Strackey suddenly became famous on the publication of his book, "Eminem Victorians", hiographical studies of Miss Florence Nightingale, Dr Arnold, the headmaster of Rugby, General Gordon, and Cardinal Manning. He was instantly regarded as a wicked, irreverent, and satirical regue, who dared to make fun in a cold, with, heartless manner of heroism in general and of the Victorian kinds of it in purcholar.

There were others who withheld their judgment, observing that Mr. Strackey had at least drawn a credible nan var. Strackly nat an least town a creation portrait of a real, live developing character, not a State portrait of a crowned dummy, that he had purified his style of some obvious tricks of smartness, and — most interesting of all — that the farther he went in the story of Queen the tarther he went in the story of Queen Victoria's life, the nearer he came to revealing, not the conventional admiration for a Soveriegn, but his personal feeling for a very able and interesting woman. His portraits of Lord Melhoume, of the Prince Consort, of Disraeli, showed not only insight and imagination but romano. About such a man, who could "criticise like an century romantic", there were clearly very great possibilities; and, whatever its inaccuracies, superficial or profound, might have been, the Life of Queen Victoria came on further acquaintance to look like the herald of a new and very good surt of biography. It was a well-formed, and wellwritten narrative, based on judicious selection from all the available authorities, but reading

"like a novel". His next bingraphical study on anything like the same scale was "Elizabeth of Essex", published in 1928. The romantic was even clearer in this than in the previous books, and the mocker not nearly so clear. The portrait of Elizabeth is frankly the author's own reading of the facts, and even less than the Victoria a dictation; and the portrait of Esset ower still more to his scheme of elaborating the only sort of character which would fit the recorded facts. The results, in these two, in Bacon, in Philip of Spain and others, may not (could not, indeed) be the whole truth: but they make up a vivid narrative in which there is no historical fuldification and a great deal of imaginative reconstruction.

In Lytton Strackey's other books, composed of shorter studies, there is the same attractive and always entertaining mixture of the romantic and the rationalist . . . Such a mind as his, with its power to absorb and to distill learning, its assure reflection, its demute wit, and its power of effort in it, should have been counted upon to achieve even greater results in the future.

Therein lies a truth about the top end of London's housing market large family houses in the centre of town have gone through the El

The Norland nanny, Gucci-clad, Range Rover-driving brigade want low-built, five or six-bedroom freehold houses with private gardens, easy access to communal gardens, garages, good security and staff accommodation in Chelsea, Knightsbridge, Belgravia, Ken-sington, Hampstead, St. John's Wood or Notting Hill Gate, They can now expect to pay a minimum of around £1.5 million for their des:

"This has only just happened." says Anthony Lassman, a long-time specialist in the so-called "unreal" market of super-expensive houses. "In the boom years of 1983 and 1984, buyers with El million to spend could expect to find a very good family house in these areas. By the late 1980s, the best houses started to cost a bit more. Then prices fell back, and it was not until last year that they rose again significantly. Now prices have surpassed those of the late 1980s because demand has outstripped supply. You can expect to pay anything from £2.75 million to £5

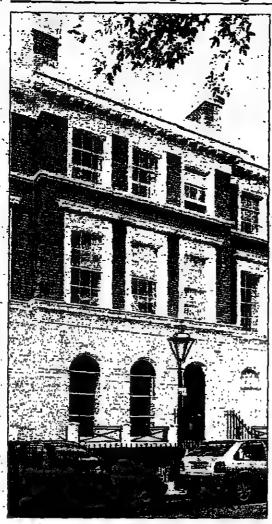

Knight Frank's latest figuresshow that prime London prices rose by 17.6 per cent last year.

"People with £1 million in the bank imagine it will buy them a home of palatial proportions in the perfect location," says Willie Gething of the buying agents Property Vision. "It comes as a bit of a shock when they discover the truth. What they want and what they can get are no longer the same

Mr Gething says that prices have been forced over the million mark because London has become the financial capital of Europe. "The city's international appeal is tremendous," he says. Foreign buyers compete and win against their British counterparts. While France and Germany struggle with recession and high taxes, London is on the cover of Newsweek.

Knight Frank estimates that a third of its sales are now made to European buyers, compared with 13 per cent a year ago. British buyers account for just 38 per cent

Until recently, a seven-figure sum would secure almost any property you desired, even in the exclusive avenues of Chelsea. Hampstead or Knightsbridge. Not any more, says Rachel Kelly

Almost suitable: You might assume that for almost a million (£985,000), 11 St James's Gardens would qualify as the perfect London family house. But the cognoscenti might reject its lack of a communal garden at the back (guaranteeing security and the right kind of neighbours), and the fact that it is on the periphery of ultra-smart London. It may be close to Notting Hill, but does not lie within the "golden triangle" of top metropolitan addresses.

Eminently suitable: Also for sale through John D. Wood, 54 Lansdowne Road is in the exclusive nexus of streets to the west of Ladbroke Grove in Notting Hill, west London. It satisfies all the "musthave" requirements of the very rich: a communal garden accessible from the back of the house, where Norland nannies can swap details of their pay cheques; plus the period features, including high ceilings, demanded by top bankers for their corporate entertaining. The price? E1.3 million.

south of the river or out of the centre," says Mr Gething. David Forbes, from the agents Chesterfield, agrees that the rich now have to consider what was once thought of as "tiger country".

"Day after day I get requests for a five-bedroom family house with a garden and off-street parking in a prime location with a price tag of £1 million, "he says. "Well, the two are incompatible. You must either find more to spend or consider Wands-

being taken over by the richest of American and European investment bankers who can muscle their way to the top deals. Other, more iunior, bank employees are having to rent while they continue their search.

enon led by the mergers and acquisitions boys, says Stephen Newbold, a partner with Knight Frank. "The City boom, plus an upturn in confidence, has mopped up much of the supply of freehold houses in Kensington and

Buyers are picky. Take two houses, both for sale at around the million mark through John D. Wood: one in Carlyle Square, Chelsea; and one in St James's for the discerning family buyer. Both are too small, one has no parking and the St James's house is perceived to be on the periphery of central London, especially by foreign buyers.

Or take the example of a house in Old Church Street, London SW3, on sale for £1.15 million through Chesterions Residential. The agents say it is on the small side for the perfect family home, and will sell as a top-flight "bachelor pad"

The boundaries acceptable for top London houses are precise, says lan Homersham of John D. Wood. Buyers chiefly want to be in three areas: parts of Kensington, parts of Belgravia and parts of Chelsea. In Kensington, buyers want to live in Holland Villas Road or mainly detached, double-fronted Victorian houses with in-and-out drives to the west of Holland Park. where prices top £4 million. Houses with good private gardens backing on to communal gardens to the north of Holland Park start at £2.5 million; mid 19th-century to late 19th-century stucco-fronted houses on long leases in Phillimore Gardens and Essex Villas cost from E1.75 million to £3.5 million; and houses on or leading off Victoria Road to the south of Kensington High Street cost between 12 million and £3 million.

In Belgravia, houses are acceptable in Eaton Square. Wilton Crescent, Chester Square and Belgrave Square. In Chelsea. Cheyne Gardens, Cheyne Walk. Cheisea Park Gardens and Cheisea Square fit the bill, as do parts of the Boltons, Tregunter Road and Little Roltons.

In Hampstead, Church Row and Hampstead Square are the most sought-after addresses for Georgian period homes.

rices are precisely definedly, too. Jonathan Hewlett from Savills says that suitable family houses now start at £1.25 million in Chelsea and £1.4 million in Knightsbridge.

Of course, the market for such properties is tiny. Land Registry figures show there were just 44 sales of houses valued at between £1 million and £1.25 million between July and September last year, and only ten sales of £2 million or above.

But the high price of houses in the centre of London ripples outwards, raising the prices of houses in the suburbs and making those in the centre well nigh unaffordable. We may complain but, as Willie Gething concludes: "If you think that London is expensive, look at the prices for comparable proper-ties in Manhattan, Tokyo — or

Luggage man is new monarch of the glen

ne of Scotland's pre-eminent sporting estates has been sold to the Vuitton family, founders of the French luggage empire for more than

Gaick, at Glen Tromje in the Grampians, is best known for the paintings of the wildlife artist Archibald Thorburn, most notably his Sunrise over Gaick. Mr Thorburn first visited the estate in 1889 and painted ptarmigan, grouse, golden eagles, hares and red deer there. Gaick Lodge, built in about 1820 and one of the oldest sporting properties in Scotland, lies at the heart of the 18.225-acre estate and is nine miles from the nearest neighbours, although there is a bothy attached to the back of the property and a stalker's house near by. The small town of Kingussie lies 14 miles away.

Xavier Vuitton is a keen sportsman who plans to run the estate the rugged landscape of which rises to just under 3,000 feet at its highest point - on traditional

"Gaick boasts an average of 97 stags and 175 hinds, as well as grouse and rough shooting, and trout and salmon fishing in the lochs and the River Tromie." says Alian Macpherson-Fletcher from agents Strutt & Parker, who sold the property.

"Keeping the estate going takes a lot of work — it could cost £60,000 to £80,000 a year to run. The only profits to be had are from selling venison to game dealers, or issuing game licences. Passed over by the Duke of Gordon during the Highland Clearances in the 18th century was a favourite hunting ground of Queen Victoria. who often stayed there when she was visiting Baimoral.

For the past 100 years, visitors to the Lodge have carved their names in the dining room's pine panelling. Archibald Thorburn and another great 19th-century artist, Sir Edwin Landseer, have both left their marks. Gaick has a past both illustrious and mysterious. After the catastrophic defeat of the 1745 Jacobite Rebellion at Culloden, the clans rallied 10 miles from Gaick, awaiting a further call to arms from Bonnie Prince Charlie. But the Prince had already fled.

A far more sinister event, known in local folklore as Call Ghaig or "the Gaick catastrophe", occurred 55 years after Culloden. Mr Macpherson-Fletcher, whose own estate lies not far from Gaick, says: "In January 1800, an avalanche swept away the old lodge at Gaick during a deerstalking party led by Captain John Macpherson of Ballachroan - no relation to me - who was known as 'the black officer'. When villagers went to investigate, they are said to have found the party frozen to death around a card table, even though the whole lodge had been swept away.

They say they had been playing cards with the Devil, as Macpherson was known to bully people into joining the King's army."

More recently, the estate was run along traditional lines by four friends who owned it for the past 25 years. But they are in their seventies now, Mr Macpherson-Fletcher says, and felt it was time to pass it on to a younger generation.

Curbs on new building are a blow to the homeless

In her second article on-homelessness, Ruchel Kelly looks at the lack of funds for social housing.

ir Brian Pease is normally mild in his comments. Yet when the Government announced its latest public housing cuts in last year's Budget, the chairman of the Housing Corporation, the organisation which funds low-cost homes, railed that the decision would have devastating results for homeless people".

"Without satisfying housing needs, it is difficult to see how government policies to improves people's health, minimise crime, meet children's educational needs and boost employment prospects can succeed," Sir Brian said.

Yet because public housing is neither a hot political issue nor a hot media issue - chiefly because most journalists own their own homes - his remarks went almost unreported. David Curry, in his three years as Housing Minister. has not faced a single opposition day debate on the matter. But Sir Brian is not alone. Other housing experts are also warning us that government

curs in public housing will have devastating results for homeless people this year. "We are to going to face a crisis in the number of people in temporary accommodation - which already stands at 43,000 families," says John Perry, the director of policy at the Chartered Institute of Housing. "We are building the lowest number of new homes since rebuilding started after the war. And the number of homes to be let to those on low incomes will fall short of the Government's own targets." In last year's Budget, grants for social housing were cut from 51.06 billion in 1996-97 to £650 million for 1997-98. The Government also cut local authority repairs and renovation budgets by £250 million. This means the housing programme has taken a 30 per cent capital cut in real terms. by far the largest cut of any government programme. The National Housing Federation. which represents housing associations, says that the worst-

Lucky: housing association tenants the Higginses

FRANK HIGGINS, a fitter, lives with his wife Catalina and sons Frank Jr. eight, Andrew, four, and Paul, one, in a two-bedroom flat on the Rootes Estate near Ladbroke Grove in west London. The family's rent is subsidised by the Notting Hill Housing Trust, whose programme this year is likely to be 480 new housing units. Cuts mean that next year this is expected to fall to 250 units. "Frank and his family could be among the last lucky ones," says the trust's Eddie Concalves. "In future we may not be able to house families like the Higginses. And even they may not escape the cuts - if the family grows, associations such as ours may not have a home big enough for them. now seems to have abandoned hit region will be the North. which will lose 1.280 homes a 64 per cent cut in new social housing. London will lose 7,000 homes.

Analysts claim the cuts rep resent an abandonment of the Government's stated target of building 60,000 new homes each year in order to meer minimum housing needs.

Jim Coulter, the chief executive of the NHF, says: The Government has failed abysmally. Earlier this year, David Curry defended his minimum target to the Environmental Select Committee against criticism that it was too low. "He even that target."

Housing organisations claim that in fact, 100,000 new homes need to be built every year to cope with growing demand - especially from single people.
Only last year the Environment Secretary, John Gummer, said that 4.4 million homes needed to be built in Britain during the next two decades. "in that context the Budget cuts make no sense at all," says Christine Laird, the Chartered Institute of Housing's chief executive. Mr Curry defends the Government's estimates. "The latest evidence of continued growth in private rented housing and home ownership shows that we are right to provide social housing at the lower end of our range of estimates." he savs. The Government estimates that it will be building 43,000 new homes a year by the end of the decade. "In previous years far more than 60,000 new lettings were built - so by the end of the decade the Government's target will have been met," a spokesman for the Department of the Environment says. "Besides the £2.5 billion provided by the Government for housing associations, we will be expecting nearly £2 billion in private finance for social lettings. And since the Budget, local authorities are able to use 25 per cent of receipts from the sale of council houses to reinvest in their housing stock."

ther funding for social housing comes from the Estates Renewal Challenge Fund, which helps to meet the cost of transferring council houses to new landlords. It was announced in the Budget that the fund would receive an extra £70 million in the next three years.

But experts dismiss the Government's figures. "The target which was set was based on performance over the past ten years," Mr Perry says. "To go back to earlier figures and take them into account is illogical.

The cuts make it difficult to bring in new money. For every El cut from the public sector. we lose El from the private sector because we cannot underpin the value of housing

The reality of cuts will hit the 11 million people who live in local authority housing. Council houses nationwide are rotting because of reduced maintenance and repair budgets, and the need for innercity regeneration means that politicians - and journalists - surely cannot ignore the pressing social housing problem for much longer.

Pension chiefs face PIA grilling

BY MARIANNE CURPHEY INSURANCE. CORRESPONDENT

INSURANCE compan suspected of dragging their feet over the pensions mis-selling review are ries of secret meetings by the Personal Investment Authority (PIA).

The PIA's chief executive, Colette Bowe, has decided to get tough with companies she believes to be the worst offenders and has warned them they must resolve most of their cases by the end of this year.

Among those on the list of interviewees are executives from Prudential, Pearl, Legal & General TSB, and Co-operative Insurance, firms with the biggest backlog of cases. However, some industry tources have predicted be outstanding "by the end of the century". The review was launched in 1994.

The meetings began last week and Ms Bowe and the PIA's chairman, Joe Palmer, met executives to the bulk of outstanding cases by December.

They discussed how the being used to resolve the cases. Ms.Bowe is believed to have told firms that if necessary they must don-ble the number of staff assigned to the review. Some bave 45 employees involved in researching claims for reinstatemen into occupational schemes. The PIA yesterday declined to comment. Pension companies were supposed to have completed reviews of all top priority cases by ACM A ...

December 31 last year.
According to PIA figures, only 7,000 out of 58,000 priority cases and an estimated 1.5 million victims mationwide have received compensation. In November the Securi-

hies and Investment Board announced a formula designed to enable compensation to be paid more quickly and reduced the questions an occupational cheme must answer from 200 to eight.

Insurance companies are waiting for clarification from the PIA on the shortened questionnaire. The PIA response is expected within a month. On Monday it emerged that the Prudentialhad agreed to compensate some of the victims of pensions mis-selling at an estimated cost of £800,000, after reaching an agreement with the GMB union.

CBI backs Clarke over base rates — for now

AND JANET BUSH

The Confederation of British Industry said yesterday that the strong pound is hitting industry and exports, and that an interest rate rise is not justified for now.

The Treasury seized on the CBI's quartedy industrial trends survey to justify the Chancellor's decision, in the face of Bank of England advice. to leave base rates on hold. Michael Jack, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, said it was clear sterling's recent strength had helped to keep industry cost pressures very subdued.

continues to argue that the pound's strength is a powerful deflationary force. This directly contradicts the view expressed on Monday night by Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, that sterling did not directly affect the build-up of domestic demand and that rates should be raised in any case. Ross Buckland, chief executive of Unigate and a member of the CBI's economic affairs committee, said that sterling's strength was beginning to feed through to manufacturers' ex-suggesting a sharp pick-up in price expectations, although City analysts noted that this probably relates to the fact that many manufacturers re-vise their list prices at the beginning of each year. A balance of 67 per cent of companies said that prices are now the factor most likely to limit export orders over the next four months. This figure - sharply up from 55 per cent three months ago - was last equalled in October 1989.

Separate figures published vesterday also provided some support for the Chancellor's stance on rates. They show tentative signs that demand for credit in the economy may have started to tail off. The latest figures from building societies showed that, while 1996 as a whole was a robust year for mortgage lending and confirmed that the recovery in the housing market was stronger than expected, mortgage demand appears to have weakened in December.

In addition, lending by British banks to the corporate sector was markedly weaker, and there was a surprising drop in the annual growth rate of M4 broad money supply. M4 fell 0.2 per cent in December, depressing its annual rate to 9.6 per cent, from 10.8 per cent previously.

Deutsche endorses Horlick ban

By Robert Miller, banking correspondent

THE heir apparent at Deutsche Bank, the owner of Morgan Grenfell, yesterday gave unequivocal backing to its subsidiary over the high-profile departure of Nicola Hodisk Horlick.

Rolf Breuer, a main board director of Deutsche who will succeed Hilmar Kopper as head of the bank in May, said: The facts are clear. Mrs Horlick inflicted damage on the bank with her attempt to poach staff and then resigned." The Frankfurt-based director also sits on the board of Morgan Grenfell. Mrs Horlick, who was sus-

She said that she would fight for reinstatement or pursue a case for "constructive dismissal" and compensation.

Morgan Grenfell insists that she has resigned and in doing so has given up her right to a 1996 bonus worth up to £500,000 and up to a further £2 million held in a deferred phantom option scheme available to senior directors.

A spokesman said: "Any-one who has left the bank before bonuses are finalised, for whatever reason, forfeits their right to that bonus payment. That is standard City practice."

After a meeting with her lawyers yesterday Mrs Horlick said: The chances of reinstatement seem slim." Morgan Grenfell is expected tomorrow to conclude its internal investigation into the alleged attempt by Mrs

Guarded welcome by business for proposals on competition

By PHILIP BASSETT, INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

BUSINESS leaders have cautiously welcomed proposals from key industrialists to improve Britain's competitiveness. Their response to the recommendations from the Commission on Public Policy and British business contrasted sharply with attacks on business figures on the commission by Michael Heseltine.

Britannia suspends savings account

THE Britannia Building Society yesterday closed its most popular instant access account to new investors but denied the move was a prelude to a takeover or a decision to abandon its mutual status. The society, the sixth largest, said that account openings had been running at 10 times the normal rate, after speculation over its future. The Britannia has been seen as a likely candidate for a merger, with societies such as the Bradfurd & Bingley tipped as possible partners.

John Heaps, chief executive of the Britannia, said that the ociety had no intention of following the Halifax and Woodwich building societies to the stock market. He said: We have said repeatedly, and I say again. Britannia will not convert and there is no windfall in prospect. The suspension of the Flexible Savings Account, which has an investing minimum of 6500, comes a day after the Britannia revealed that it would be transferring its 100,000 current account holders to the Co-operative Bank.

Panther pact over Edit

PANTHER SECURITIES, the firm aiming to oust the board of the Exmoor Dual Investment Trust (Edit) at an entraordinary meeting on February 3, has promised shareholders that it will vote for final dividends to be paid. Panther blocked the payment at an agm last year but wants shareholders to vote against the board's proposals to liquidate the fund. In a letter to shareholders Panther says Edit's record has been abysmal, achieving only a 3.3 per cent growth in net asset value in seven years.

600 Group shares fall

SHARES of 600 Group fell 55p to 143 p yesterday after the engineering group gave warning that full-year profits would fall short of City expectations. The company blamed weak demand for machine tools in the UK in the summer, which had continued into the final quarter. The effect was compounded by the high level of stocks built up in anticipation of the normal rise in activity in the second half of the year. The company said that although excess stocks have been reduced, demand was unlikely to recover until-next year.

First reading for Bill

A BILL designed to ensure sick and disabled savers receive windfall payments from building societies is to get its first reading today. Douglas French, Conservative MP for Gloucester, wants to give statutory protection to those who have accounts held in trust including the sick, the disabled, children and charities. Many such savers are at present being excluded from floration or conversion windfalls. The legisla tion would not be retrospective, so the Woolwich, Alliance &

Customers will also be able to view or change standing orders and direct debits and transfer money between Royal Bank accounts.

Austin Reed sales rise

AUSTIN REED, the clothing retailer, enjoyed a 10 per cent jump in sales in the run-lip to Christmas and said that margins on its women's wear have recovered after a setback in the division last year. The company said that its Chester Barrie menswear label performed particularly strongly in the US, but the Austin Reed wholesale business in mainland Europe continued to trade at depressed levels. It was still seeing a lack of consumer confidence and spending in key markets. The shares rose lip, to 2122 p.

Earnings were 7.50 a share, from 6.20 last time. Net cash was unchanged at £4 million. Katherine Tickle has been appointed the company's managing director.

Litten Tree pubs to grow

SURREY FREE INNS, the retail pub company, intends to open around ten new Litten Tree branded pubs a year. It is planning to open four further Litten Trees in the second half of the year, taking the total estate to 11. Tony Hill, managing director, said the company could fund the expansion plans from existing resources. In the half year to November 17 the company lifted pre-tax profits 72 per cent to £1.04 million. Overall turnover rose 19 per cent to £7 million. Earnings were 8.6p a share (6p). The interim dividend is 1.25p a share (1p).

Nissan's economical little runner

☐ Why the Japanese plumped for Wearside ☐ Black arts of the financial manipulators ☐ Basic disagreement on base rates cans said that they were pulling out of Merseyside as a vote of confidence for the first region and a black mark for the second, and several voices speaking with British workers tend to be cheaper to sack than their continental counterparts. The corstrong Geordie accents were heard doing just that yesterday.

Tempting, but wrong. The Halewood-Sunderland divide ollary is that they are more attractive to hire in the first place, which helps to explain Nissan's position.

The Japanese had three op-tions. They could have stepped up production on their home turf, but this would have denied them entry to the single European market and whatever sort of monetary union exists once hiring starts in 1999.

They could have spent billions creating a new plant for their mid-market model elsewhere in Europe, but risk being left, in a few years, in the same position as Ford — forced to choose between the Continent and an existing British plant, except that Sunder-land would even then have been more attractive than Halewood. Or they could have geared up, at minimal expense, in the North East, safe in the knowledge that the costs of reversing that de-cision would be limited.

We are often told, and this line was on offer again yesterday, that efficiency in the British car in the world. But production costs are a cockrail of wages, social costs, exchange rates and the age of the plant. They are not fixed, and the elements trade off against each other. High wages means low investment, which means clapped-out plant, possibly exporting against favourable exchange rates.

There is really only one choice: insecurity in return for jobs now, or a refusal to accept any reduction of your existing industrial base but little growth by inward investment. Those in any doubt which is preferable might consider the state of the German

Countering the spin from City's PR

IT IS a frightening thought that the destiny of a huge company can be decided by the votes of a dozen City fund managers. It is even more frightening that their votes might have been influenced by public relations advisers. One of the least impressive the City has been the rise of the corporate spin doctor. Time was, they could be relied upon to pour the gin and tonics before lunch and retire to a quiet corner until their services were needed again. These days no one drinks gin and tonic, and they have progressed to a seat at the top table. There is a groundswell of opinion building in the City about their role, and it is not a favourable one. PR firms' main function is to put ideas into the popular consciousness, through informal chats with the press or brokers' analysts, that avoid the normal means of communication, the official announcement through the Stock Exchange. This practice has one great advantage: deniability. The conhas one great disadvantage: it is against the rules. The Takeover Panel's code mentions PR firms. and forbids the informal dis-semination of important information. Some have been caught at it, and reprimanded.

It is hard to explain the rise of the financial PR firm. Takeover bids are perhaps more sensitive matters today than they were a couple of decades ago — think of the public fuss over the Forte/ Granada bid. Public perception of a corporate strategy can make or break it - look at Brent Spar.

The PR practitioners are, in many cases, more skilled and better paid than those they try to manipulate, and the information available may be more useful and accurate than once it was. But in a takeover bid they may also be on a huge, million pound-plus success fee, which does nothing for their objectivity.

There are moves to impose on the PR industry a formal code of conduct. This is probably fruitless, an attempt to regulate those whose whole purpose is the circumvention of the existing rules. All one can hope for is that those 12 fund managers whose decisions count, when they dine with the PR industry, take with them a long spoon.

Great minds on collision course

WE are at one of those points when the Chancellor of the Exchequer disagrees with the advice of the Bank of England, and both views are irreconcilable. The first believes sterling's rise is deflationary and that a rise in interest rates is not needed, the second that the exchange rate does not necessarily impinge on consumer de-mand, which is too strong, and that interest rates must rise. The fact that the argument is prob-soon as next Monday's fourthquarter GDP figures, it these are stronger than expected. But playing the iron Chancellor may not be the ideal role for a political Chancellor. Look how smartly Mr Clarke moved to rubbish Gordon Brown's big speech on tax. Is he really going to launch another pre-emptive strike against inflation just so Mr Brown meets the target in two years' time, while hobbling his own re-election chances by trig-gering more mortgage rate rises?

Homing predictions

□ OF THIS column's 16 predictions at the start of 1997, one came true within days and two more arrived yesterday. A football club ran into financial trouble, and an inconsistent Ian Lang confounded the market. The takeover of Mid Kent Water was blocked to prevent the loss of ably over a quarter point on rates comparators used by the industry regulator to measure relative performance. Yet at the last count there were more than 20 such surviving in the water sector. Meanwhile, the electricity industry has almost dis-appeared, subsumed into larger groups until only two indepen-dent companies are left.

punishment when things go wrong. The 600 Group machine toolmaker suffered yesterday when it warned the market about destocking by dealers who sell the company's computer-controlled lathes. Worries that the machine tool cycle had already run its course knocked more than 25 per cent off the shares. The shares are valued at only 9 times forecast earnings and 7 times 1998 earnings. On such a rating one might assume that machine tools were heading for deep recession, or that 600 Group was heading for serious trouble. Yet there is no evidence to support either proposition. With expectations of profits of E11 million, the company is hardly a basket case, 600 Group did report a softer market in the UK last summer, but the main

RISK is in the eye of the beholder but some businesses, branded as cyclical never escape punishment when things go wrong. The 600 culprit for the sales downturn was a rush by dealers to build up supplies last year of its punishment when things go wrong. The 600 huge popularity. Demand pushed order times out to six months, causing dealers to build up stocks. These are unwinding, but 600 Group can now deliver in less-than four weeks.

A climate of steady growth and low inflation is ideal for machine toolmakers; by rights the sector should be prospering rather than heading for collapse. Unfortunately, old prejudices die hard. Fashionable service businesses, such as recruitment are even more volatile than engineers, being prone to collapsing sales during recession. Yet such companies now enjoy share ratings of 20 times earnings. Poor old 600 Group must live and die an engineer, but the shares do look cheap.

Somerfield

EVERY dog has its day and so it is with new flotations. Those investors who bought shares in Somerfield last August at its deeply-discounted 145p flotation price will have made a tidy profit of up to 20 per cent on Monday, had they sold their shares at 174p, when the stock reached a record high. Now for the bad news: that could turn out to be as good as it is going to get. Nothing in yesterday's maiden interim results suggests a reason for the share price to reach a similar level in the foresee-

The biggest worry about Somerfield is sales growth. Yesterday's figures made painfully clear that the vast bulk of its unspectacular like-for-like sales increase comes from those stores that have been converted

Life Sciences

SIR Christopher Bland, former boss of LWT, once described Life Sciences International as his baby. Television may be more glamorous and made him much more money, but Sir Christopher and his team assembled the laboratory equipment group more or less from scratch.

For the first five years, Life Sciences gave its shareholders a terrific run for their money. Sadly, the second five downhill as the company wrestled with a string of healthcare budgets, a poor acquisition and an expensive legal dispute among them. strongly profitable.

Triplex/Cook

TRIPLEX LLOYD has brought out a sledge hammer in its battle for William Gook. With its final bid, worth 389p. It has accepted that its fellow have more life in it than the City expected.

Increasing the offer by some 30 per cent should still not break the bank at Triplex. it plans to take Cook's prodocts abroad, and says it has already received interest from it largest clients in buy-ing a broader range of products from an enlarged group.

Other benefits, it says, should should wash its face within the first year, even if the seven institutions that control William Cook opt for Triplex's cash alternative. If William Cook does indeed produce the 37-2p earnings it has now forecast for 1997. Triplex's higher bld values the company on a lower mulinie than its last offer.

Three months ago, nobody would have considered paying anywhere near 400p for guishing at 240p and its management were downbeat about its prospects. Since the has claimed that there was always more under the mattress than previously revealed. Few companies are so shy of boasting about their achievements. Either Cook is the exception or Triplex is particular nut.

Lowe Bell holds back

ANTHONY CARDEW was not the only public relations officer on Nicola Horlick's bastily drawnup list. It appears that I a Horlick shopped around, putting a call into Lowe Bell Financial first. Quickly - but not that quick -Lowe Bell put in a request for more time. Then in jumped Cardew, the Max Clifford of City PR, and Horlick's roller-coaster ride took off. Word has it that Lowe Bell would have said "no" to superwoman's request. Now they would not want to upset Morgan Grenfell, would they?

HAPPY BIRTHDAY Greg Hutchings. The chairman of Tomkins is 50 today, but he won't be marking it with a party. "Nobody knows I'm 50, and I try to pretend birthdays don't happen," he whispers. Instead, he will go for an early morn-

Party wine

SIR James Goldsmith is mixing drinks with politics. Although perhaps bester used to champagne, his. Referendum Party is launching its own wine. It's English, of course, from the Rowenden vine-yard in Kent, and the Ridgewood winery in East Sussex. Called Sovereignty, it will sell at £4.50 a bottle. But will it be used to toest Sir James's success at the general election, or to drown his sources?

WORD has it that Procter & Gamble is breaking its ties with the gaudy world of children's beauty pag-eants. For the past 30 years, the multinational has sponsored the Miss USA, Miss Teen USA, and Miss Universe pageznis. As the contract runs out this year, a spokeswoman says that it is unlikely that P&G will renew. The official line is that its products are not getting the cover-age P&G is looking for. Or could the Boxing Day murder of a child beauty queen in Boulder, Colorado, have been a factor?

Rankin bows out

AFTER 37 years at Scottish & Newcastie, starting out as a warehouseman and ending as chairman, Sir Alick Rankin is bowing out next week. Aged 62, the Old Etonian is retiring to Glenalmond, Perthshire, where he will be anything but reclusive he remains chairman of Christian Salvesen, deputy chairman of General Accident, and a non-executive director of the Bank of Scotland.

Never short of humour, Sir Alick recalls when he was subjected to psychometric testing. Two profes-sors walked into my office and quizzed me for half an hour. Two weeks later they came back to debrief me. They looked a bit shifty and, wondering if something was wrong, I asked them to come out with it. Then they blurted out Broadly, we don't know how you got the job and how you've kept it."

MEMBERS of The London Capital Club have rechristened the club's popular Tequila Slammer. Now known as Tequila a Horlick's, the knockout drink is said to be a big hit among members from Morgan Grenfell.

Gerry Robinson and Granada are believed to have paid Citigate El million for its work on the Forte bid out of an estimated £120 million in fees

No soft soap in the attempts to clean up PR in the City

Jon Ashworth says the Takeover Panel is prepared to take stern action over unauthorised leaks get a grip on them when wet. They slip and slide around the demonstrated more clearly than in the case of Granada's tub, leaving as oily film on the dirty bathwater. And oh, the £3.3 billion punt for Forte, Sir Rocco Forte was in Yorkshire when the bid flashed up on the City screens on November 22 It is in the murky world of 1995, and never fully recovered takeover bids that the role of his poise. Granada's PR team, the financial public relations led by Jonathan Clare of Citigate, became locked in a mighty tussle with Brunswick. led by Alan Parker. The outcome was perhaps inevitable, but the Brunswick corner put

The bid for Forte cost Granada an estimated £120 million in fees; the bulk of it on underwriting, Granada's advisers, ABN Amro and Barciays de Zoete Wedd, received £11 million each. Cirigate pocketed abour £1 million for its work, although no figure was disclosed. Either way, Mr Clare and his team got their celebratory dinner at the Berkeley.

This aside, City PRs have much to concern them. Soon after the completion of the spoils are huge — but so are Granada bid. Sir David over Panel, wrote to senior cautioning them about the improper leaking of price-sensitive information before and during takeover bids. Sir David noted the Panel's "increasing level of concern" about the number of unauthorised leaks, and gave warning of stern action if the practice continued.

Financial Dynamics, one of the bigger City players, had been embroiled in a row over the alleged leaking of price-sensitive information ahead of financial results from Caradon, the building products group. Some in the industry came out in support of tighter regulation of City PRs. Those supporting a system of licens-ing for practitioners included Anthony Cardew, currently acting for Nicola Horlick in her dispute with Deutsche Morgan Grenfell.

The role of the City PR always be controversial, but the industry insists it has cleaned up its act. the penalties for those who Calcutt, chairman of the Take- Some of the dodgier practices seen in the Eighties — private Nowhere was the process figures in the PR industry, eyes tailing clients, investigators sifting through dustbins - are long gone, they insist. Regulatory bodies such as the Securities and Investments Board (SIB) and Takeover Panel have seen to that.

But the industry remains as shrouded in suspicion as ever. Can you really trust that PR adviser when they feed you that "hot" tip about the other camp? Why is it that certain Sunday newspapers always seem to be on the inside track? Scions of the PR industry close ranks on this one. Lord

Chadlington, aka Peter Gummer, the chairman of Shandwick, said that firms previously brought in on special projects are now increasingly working with company boards at every stage. Piers Pottinger, group man-aging director of Lowe Bell

Communications, said advisers were under much closer acrutiny from regulatory authorities. Mr Pottinger, whose assignments included Hoylake's bid for BAT industries, and Minorco's punt for Consolidated Goldfields, said it was important to assess a client's case dispassionately to to scrutiny. He said: "It's got to be more than: 'Ya! Booh! Sucks to you. We're talking about value."

Brian Basham, scourge of ICI and others, says City PR has moved into a new league. Mr Basham, who acted for Hanson in the tussle with ICI. and represented the late Sir James Gulliver during the Guinness saga, said: "Any-body now who indulges in the Friday night drop is putting their client's interests in jeopardy. The SIB is waiting to pounce. You've just got to be quicker and more creative, while staying within the Media handling is just part of it. The PR team will work with bankers and lawyers to agree the main issues, and try to ensure that a company's line stands up to scrutiny. They are often heavily involved with investor relations, and in matters of documentation. There are also political and regulatory issues to consider.

That "huge" success fee may not be such a big deal after all. Philip Healey, editor of Acquisitions Monthly, said projecting the right image early on in a bid was worth its weight in gold — as shown by Granada's wrong-footing of Forte. Once the bid machine begins to roll, fees to advisers become an almost secondary

Mr Healey says PR advisers vill ultimately fall prey to the next downturn in the economic cycle. The frantic activity seen in the Eighties dried up in the recession, and will do so again. Mr Healey said: "Enjoy it while it lasts. The mergers and acquisitions market probably has no more than one or two years left to run."

good laugh. The billionaire Hunt brothers came unstuck years ago, but the memory still gives me a warm feeling. Their attempt to corner the silver market failed when the world's petty thieves unloaded old sporting trophies in tonnage lots — a rare exam-ple of poetic justice in the markets. The Leeson case also looks promising. (Nicola Horlick, for whom a million or so may apparently not be enough, another.) could star in

But once the gee-whiz scheme is worked out, each incident tends to be forgotten. Sometimes useful lessons are learnt. The management of derivatives traders is surely tighter since Leeson and Metallgesellschaft; and Mrs Horlick may make City firms usefully more edgy about promoting staff as stars. But sometimes amnesia is almost instant. It is only six months since possibly the biggest loser of them all was exposed; but who now remembers Yasuo Hamanaka? In a decade as Sumitomo's chief copper trader, he repeatedly tried to squeeze the copper futures market. The estimated cost of closing out the long position he had accumulated was last put at $4 billion. But the killer blow was delivered not by little men, but by the hedge funds. Hamanaka name is hard to memorise, and Sumitomo survives him. Moreover $4 billion is the gross figure. Nobody yet knows how much Sumitomo made on his trades in the years before they were exposed. And that is surely the interesting figure. The huge loss is descrvedly a joke.

Manipulation creates false market, and the speculator is not the only victim when it comes unstuck, as thousands of out-of-work Chilean miners can testify. It ought, then, to be stopped. Easier said than done, you may say. The crime is ancient - do you remember "forestalling and regrating" from your schooldays? - and dates back to Roman times at least in all that time, the perpetrators have usually got away with it; but neither that awkward fact, nor the bone that time will produce its hen the greedy own revenge, should make over-reach them- us tolerate it. It can be us tolerate it, it can be stopped: or if not stopped.

The law is the oldest remedy, but it is also the least effective. The SIB report on the Sumitomo affair seems to forget this. It argues that futures manipulation is already illegal under Section 47 of the Financial Services Act - which was drafted to stop share market rigging. But it seems unlikely that even a Demosthenes, let alone our own prosecuting authorities, could persuade a British court to share this view, or that it would help much if he did. In the US commodity market, manipulation has long been forbid-den under the Commodity Exchange Act; but there has hardly ever been a successful

What does work in the US, and could work here, is transparency, as Christopher Gilbert, of Queen Mary College, argues in an academic study this week. In the US, traders with large open fu-tures positions have to report them to the authorities every week; the aggregate figures are officially published within three days. This makes stealth impossible. The London Metal Exchange apparently lacks the powers to insist on such disclosure. It set up a "voluntary" reporting system post-Sumitomo, which seems to be working unexpectedly well, with 95 per cent compliance; but a firm rule would be more comforting.

nd why should you bother with a set of rules which in practice applies only to professionals? Because there is a bigger issue here. Ever since the international branches of the US banks came to London to escape intrusive regulation, there has been a danger of a regulatory deval-uation race. But the fringe operations of the swinging '60s - remember when newspapers could not use the word "eurodollar" without an explanatory footnote? have now grown up. The global market is the new word; and global markets demand global rules. If the Anglo-Saxons cannot get their acis together. Brussels may have the last laugh.

The chocolate industry is used to illustrate the business logic behind expansion into emerging markets. Cadbury's case study tells how the confectionary giant noticed that none of its rivals had moved in to Poland in the years after its revolution. Demand for chocolate was being met by a handful of small Polish manufacturers, with mone of the glamour in Cadbury's arsenal

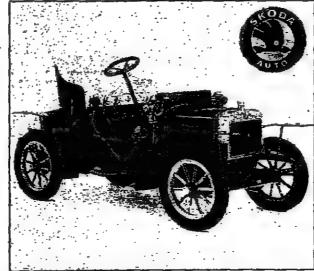

Poland was a relatively small market, the study continues the average Briton ate 14 kilograms of sweets in 1994 against 4.72 kilograms eaten by the average Pole. But years of Communist rule had artificially capped chocolate appetites and the market was young. Cadbury's first dilemma was whether to produce chocolate in Poland, or just ship bars out to the country and then distribute them. Setting up shop involved substantial risk, but exporting was being hindered by import barriers set up by the It decided to enter the coun-dealt with by the case study from the Association of Water Service Companies of England and Wales. It explains the logic behind privatising water and about the fears held by its users over the misuse of a monopoly. The users, it explains, are stakeholders who with shareholders and directors hold an interest in the utility. It goes on to explain that stakeholders often have conflicting interests, and invites students to ask how to resolve these tensions.

The roles of the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are explained and hypothetical conflicts between Ofwat, the MMC, envimnmental agencies and the Government are created. Ultimately The Times 100 aims to give students the information they need to connect their studies to the real world and with the financial pages of newspapers. The publication contains a glossary of businessspeak and a guide to using the

While history textbooks can hold good for decades, business studies texts tend to date sooner. Their task is to explain an ever-changing environment, and this gives them a very short shelflife. The development of deregulated water authorities would be covered by few textbooks; indeed, many still in use in the classroom deal with water privatisation as nothing more than a possibility. Dave Needham, senior lecturer in Business Education at Nottingham Trent University, is one of the authors recruited to compile the case studies. For the past year, he has been talking to teachers and pupils who used the first edition of The Times 100, and helped to draw up improvements to develop the second edition.

When you discuss concepts and ideas in the classroom, it is difficult for students to gain a picture about how they work." he says. "By giving students examples which they can identify with, the studies provide them with and give them a much firmer grasp of the issues which they are dealing with.

"In business studies, it is just not possible to teach the same area in the same way year after year. At the same time, schools do not have the budgets which allow them to update their resources as often as they would like. We found that teachers with limited budgets have welcomed the materials which arrive regularly and free of charge because they provide an updated prospective upon which they can base the delivery of their courses."

The first edition drew praise from everyone from schoolchildren to Tony Blair, the Labour leader, who said he found the series fascinating reading. The second edition is accompanied by a free CD-Rom, which contains all the entries and allows each study to be printed out and used as a handout. They should have reached every UK secondary school by the end of the month.

Wanna fix Radio 4? Dump The Archers

BRENDA

hus been blamed for introducing this . American vulgarism into the long debate about the BBC (and who has squirmed to hear it prettied up with Anglicisms like, "If it isn't broken, don't try to fix it." or worse. "... to repair it". I would like to offer a modification, "If it ain't broke, don't say you're going to fix it."

Too late, alas, to offer this sage advice to James Boyle, the new Controller of BBC Radio 4. He has already announced that a radical three-year renovation of Middle England's favourite network is on the way.

Will Broadcasting House never learn? Radio 4 listeners do not like change. They can write irate four-page letters in blue ink to Feedback faster than you can say "Dogger. Fisher. German Bight". They have mastered voicemail, fax and e-mail. They tend to get their way. The last thing that any reformer should do is to alert them to mobilise. Boyle down from BBC Scotland, can't take back what he has said about preventing Radio 4 from becoming a museum piece. That is a pity, because his instincts are good. If I never hear Breakaway again (Boyle is already shaking up this 1950s-ish Saturday travel programme, with its appalling theme tune). I will be a happier woman. I might even be able to put up with The Archers.

On second thoughts, I wouldn't. Were I in Boyle's shoes. I would boldly go where none has dared and dump this postwar relic of agricultural didacticism. At the very least I would put it into Farming Taday.

On Sunday, just to be sure I was hrave enough to make this nation-shaking proposal, I tuned in to The Archers omnibus edition, to find my longstanding prejudices glariously confirmed. Did anyhody think that the cow - the one with the swollen "oodder" - was going to turn out to have mere mastitis? I didn't, not for one minute. But I was wrong to diagnose BSE. An Archers script would never be that out of date. The wretched beast, whose dripping milk was (we were told - yuk) the colour of honey, was suffering from the much more topical E-coli infection - the consequence of untrimmed hooves and a mucky yard. A lesson to us all.

My next move would be to jettison all those giggly panel games in which four males laugh themselves sick while a female keeps score. Radio 4 wants younger listeners and it keeps on broadcasting Just a Minute? Last Saturday's big wrangle over whether Clement Freud said "buckets" twice or just once is hardly the thing to draw in the young fleeing Radio I in the wake of Chris Evans.

Then out would go PM at 5pm, which repeats the news and headlines in the same vords so often that by the time they are

f it ain't broke, don't fix it." As one who has been blamed for introducing this know them by heart. In its place I would put From Our Own Correspondent, a jewel wasted in its Saturday 11.30am setting. I'd say goodbye too to Thought for the Day insulting to non-believers and intrusive to those who take the Today programme for the political agenda-setting it purports to be.

I would increase the number of live shows. Radio 4's dangerousness is under-appreciatcd. As one who is occasionally given the chance to appear on Melvyn Bragg's Monday morning Start the Week, I am always astonished by the intensity of response to the programme. Occasionally, I am asked why such and such a person has been given a seemingly hard time.

"You do know the programme's live?" ! say. Yes, they do. What they do not appreciate is the awesome prospect of embarking on 55 minutes of unscripted conversation with guests who may have to be prodded to start talking. Prodded or not. American guests tend to leave marvelling that they have been on the airwaves for nearly an hour with no station break, commercial or voices phoning in.

If there is a counterpart to Radio 4 elsewhere in the world, 1 would love to hear about it. The uniqueness of the network lies in the whole variegated Radio 4 mix. Whether you like Women's Hour or hate The News Quiz is irrelevant. The Radio 4 audience knows that by and large it will hear intelligent speech to which advance thought has been given and that the menu will offer a change of subject in a short time. My advice to Mr Boyle would be to forget about age. He is entitled to try to fix Radio 4. But at the start he should say that it is a Thile the British are talking about introducing the V-chip to black out V television programmes parents do not want their children to see, the Americans have done something about it.

But done what? Congress passed a law last February to make the chip compulsory in all new television sets. Then the industry agreed to design a rating system to alert the chip to a programme's content.

The result could be more, not less, sex and violence on television. The Supreme Court ruled in June that when people can block offensive programming for themselves, the law is not justified in doing it for them. According to this week's New Yorker, this ruling could allow more unrestrainedly programme onto screens than be fore, to be seen by the millions of young children whose parents do nothing whatso ever to control their viewing. A salutary reminder to Britain that the V-chip protects only those children who don't need it.

The scheme to squeeze two floors of editorial staff into one so that the vacant level can be let is working a treat. Day of the vampire: the clips on Fortean TV include a beast suspected of killing goats in Puerto Rico by sucking out their blood and livers

Myths and miracles

world's first autopsy — on a mermaid. It sent a reporter to Puerto Rico in search of a suspected "vampire" which is supposed to have killed hundreds of goats by sucking out their blood and

But just when you think it is getting a bit silly even for Channel 4, viewers are introduced to a shoal of ancient dogooding Turkish fish which heal skin diseases by nibbling away at the infection.

This is the wacky but profes-sionally produced world of new series Fortean TV, which starts an eight-part, primetime run next week. It is loosely based on the awardwinning monthly cult magazipe Fortean Times, which shot to lame through mysteries such as crop circles, has seen sales spiral from 1,800 to 60,000 in the past five years, and is set to expand further with a spin-off bi-monthly called Bizarre next month (cover story: self-combustion, with pictures).

It preaches the notion, suspect but appealing, that science cannot explain everything and that there are happenings outside our ken. It is a magazine message which especially appeals to men, who compose 75 per cent of Fortean Times readers. At the very least it provides them with talking points over a pint.

The approach was laid down 70 years ago by an American writer, Charles Fort, through such titles as Books of the Damned, and its evergreen, fundamental appeal has been demonstrated recently with a vengeance by programmes such as The X Files and the array of popular formats dedicated to the paranormal on both ITV and the BBC in the past two years.

But there is a further strange and very British twist to the tale. Fortean TV is styled as a religious programme and is part of Channel 4's agreed portion (52 hours a year) of religious output.

It is presented by an avun-cular Church of Wales priest, Father Lionel Fanthorpe, who wears black biker gear and a cheery, middle-aged smile. He ends each screen episode with a happy song. "I hope to establish a link, to show that religion is not cold and fanati-cal," he says. Surely some

. Not so: Channel 4's commissioning editor for religious programmes. Peter Grimsdale, is proud of the way it stretches the boundaries away from hymn-singing towards the mysteries of the Universe — a shift handily guaranteed to take the series into prime time rather than tringe slots.

Further, the programme has been devised by American-born Peter Stuart, whose dynamic company Rapido specialises in lively, sometimes bad-taste programmes: it makes the revamped Girlie Show, Baadass TV and Eurotrash, which also thrives on a diet of bizarre news.

Fortenn TV has abandoned the world of poltergeists and haunted houses in favour of "real life" in real places - but always with a light touch of the surreal. Remember the fuss about the glass building thought reflected an image of the Madonna? That is prime Fortean TV material - except that it has been done. One of the programmes has a sequence about a cinnamon bun which has taken the shape of Mother Teresa, and an aubergine whose flesh, when cut open, carried the Arabic symbols for Aliah.

To me, a world where a nun on a bun can be screened

next to an item on dead goats, and the way that hair is growing on a Chilean Madonna contributes to a much richer mix than usual," says Stuart. This format would allow us to do the world's tallest man. too. It's all very healthy.

Grimsdale denies he is engaged in a cynical exercise or seeking to encourage the gullible to retreat to a non-rational mental cave after centuries of painful scientife progress. He has received praise for two series of Desperately Sceking Times. "I'm not sure this is for Something, in which Peter serious people." he says. # Seven-day weakness grips the Express

s The Express seven-day newspaper experiment beginning to look like a L failure? Even the UK Press Gazette, the rather continus trade magazine, talks of the Express as "still in free fall".

Certainly the ABC figures for December 1996 make dreadful reading for Lord Stevens's and Lord Hollick's United News & Media group. The average daily sales of the Express slumped to 1.134.870, giving it a lead of just 2.500 over The Daily Telegraph.

That is a fall of more than 10 per cent compared with December 1995, while the rolling six-month average figure is down 5.3 per cent. Over the same period, the sixmonth figure for the Daily Mail is up 11.3 per cent at 2.090.503. The Sunday edition of the Express is faring even worse. Year on year its sales have dropped 13.6 per cent while The Mail on Sunday has continued to edge upwards.

So, despite heavy investment in extrapaging and new glossy magazines, has The Express's big idea for une staff to produce a seven-day paper been a failure?

Not surprisingly Stephen Grahiner. chief executive of United Newspapers.

says no. "The decline in The Express's fortunes was never going to be turned round in one month or even a year." he says, "It's going to take a long time and a lot of money and we are confident that we will settle on an upward trend."

Mr Grabiner points to his January decision to lower the price of The Express to 20p every Saturday as a sign of the company's commitment to invest. The sales on Saturday have risen by 350,000 copies to 1.7 million, he claims, and the Sunday edition is up 100,000 with the help of special 350 vouchers.

Rivals accept that The Express's decision to join the price war, albeit belatedly, has increased this month's sales by about 50-60,000 a day. However, after the heavy investment and a huge redundancy programme, it is difficult to believe that The Express is now making any profit.

Complete and utter rubbish." retaliates Mr Grabiner, "We made money in % and we will make significantly more in 37 anyway the cost of the redundancies has been taken helow the line."

Jeremy Deedes, the managing director of the Telegraph, accepts that The Express's 20p Saturday price has, for the time being. stopped the mt. "But I believe that we will overtake them soon," he says. "The newspaper world can be very cruel. Their two new weekend magazines are not had but it is usually a bad time to add new products when you are going downhill, as we have seen at both The Express and The Observer. If the quality of the rest of the paper is not right it doesn't matter what extra paging or magazines you put in."

Mr Deedes, a former deputy editor of the Daily Express, argues that one of the fundamental problems facing his rival is its constant changes in editorial direction.

"One Editor has taken The Express downmarket the new upmarket and so on; those switches are very confusing. It becomes a rollercoaster ride in which readers fall off or jump off and they become more reluctant to return and take a new look."

Mr Deedes does not believe that price cutting will cure the ills of The Express. especially so long after The Times and The Sun cut their prices, "Price-cutting gives readers a lalse impression of what a newspaper costs to produce and it is difficult to put the price back up without losing sales, he argues.

The Express's chronic problems are rooted more in journalism than in marketing, he argues, "I have always operated on the basis that every successful national newspaper has to provide something that is the best". The Times may have the best letters or perhaps leaders (although I don't believe that myself).

"The Telegraph has the best sports and news coverage. The Mail is very good at trash' journalism potemic and women's features - but when you come to The Express it's difficult to see where it is absolutely the best. At Associated Newspapers senior executives believe that the seven-day experiment at The Express is a dud. Cynically, they suggest that it was principally a way of sacking 80 journalists to reduce costs rather than a great editorial innovation.

Where seven-day papers with one staff are successful in America, there is little or no competition. In Britain The Express faces enormous pressure from II national dailies and nine aggressive Sunday rivals. Without specific editor and staff dedicated to planning and creating a Sunday edition, it is difficult to see The Express on Sundays regaining some of the 930,000 copies by which it trails The Mail on Sunday.

The gap between The Express and the Mail continues to widen and in what may prive a major psychological blow to The Express, Associated executives claim that the Daily Mail is also poised to outsell The Express in Scotland where once the Crusader seemed unassailable.

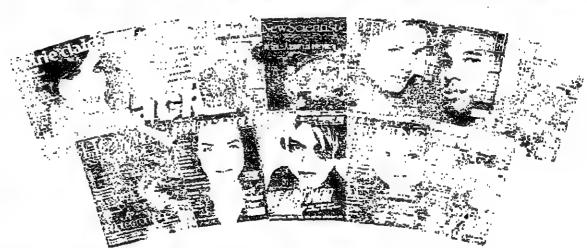

Sir David English, chairman of Associated Newspapers, says: "We welcome the hattle and rather than cutting our price we are investing in quality journalism. It is up to the public to decide what they prefer."

Mr Grabiner remains unabashed: "We are very happy with the seven-day venture so far ... Of course, there is still a lot to do and it won't be done overnight. We are going to put in more money, money that was not available to past editors, and we are doubling the amount of colour."

It is, perhaps, too early to write off The Express experiment, but one thing is certain: it will not be able to reverse its decline unless its owners are committed to journalism. rather than cash, for some years to come. · Sir Nicholas Lloyd was Editor of the Daily Express from April F60 to November 1995.

Sales push for capital property

Christopher Warman reports on the forthcoming Cannes exhibition

entral London's prime properties will be on show this year in Cannes, thanks to an enormous scale model of the capital and its main commercial buildings built by the London model makers Pipers International.

The model is the centrepiece of a concerted London-wide presence at Mipim, the largest international property market in the world, which takes place in March.

The model itself reflects the value of the London market. At 14.5 metres long and 4.5 metres wide, it cost £1.3 million to build. This elaboratelydetailed model of London in miniature is the most expensive and biggest of its kind, displaying 30,000 of the capital's buildings, and it took 12 model makers a year to build from wood and Perspex. It covers a total of 39 square miles of central London, from King's Cross to Victoria and from Puddington to London City Airport. The makers claim to have omitted nothing from the London skyline. They are even, cheekily, intending to place in the City the proposed Millennium Tower. Sir Norman Foster's controversial 90-storey building.

Touchscreen technology can provide further information about the selected site, offering information about not only the building, but details about the surrounding area, including Tube and train connections. restaurants and shops. From the model, international firms will get both an overview of the capital and information about vacant office space.

The model is the brainchild of Barry McKeogh, chief exec-utive of Pipers International, and has been championed by St Martin's Property Corporation Ltd: Greycoat plc: the British Land Company plc. East of London is set for regeneration

Lift-off for Thames Gateway revival

THE feeling of growing opti-mism in the market, illustrated by the large British presence at the Mipim show, finds another expression with developments affecting the Thames Gateway, the swath of land stretching from the Rayal Docks in east London to Tilbury, Essex, on the north bank of the Thames, and from Greenwich to Sheerness in Kent on the south.

Renamed Thames Gateway from the previous East London Corridor when the Government launched a new initiative in 1995, it is the subject of a commitment to stop the drift of development to the west of London.

The Gateway has received endorsement of its importance for the Government by winning over £130 million in regeneration bids — the largest sum for any region.
On February 4 and 5, there is to be a conference on Thames Gateway, organised by Gateway Publishing & Events, which also publishes a magazine, Thames Gateway Initiatives. The event is sup-ported by English Partner ships, the Government's regeneration arm. Thames Gateway London Partnership, North Kent Success, and the London Docklands Development Corporation, which together form the basis for action to regenerate the 4,000 hectares of land available for development: Speakers include David Curry, the regeneration minister and Frank Dobson. 'Labour's spokesman on London and transport - a key ingredient in improving the infrastructure. The decision to site stations on the Channel Tunnel high-speed rail link at Ebbsfleet, near Dartford, and at Stratford, is crucial to future developments. The conference will also cover the economy, employment benefits, education and technology, tourism and the millennium festival.

Zena Phillips of Gateway Publishing & Events, believes this largest regeneration area in Europe is poised for progress after a slow start. Two years ago the private knew about the Thames Gateway, but did not know what was happening because the marketing was not effective. We do notice now an unsurge in interest. It is beginning to happen." Conference information from Ms Phillips. 0171-536

But why, just five months before Britain hands dominion over Hong Kong to the Chinese, has the British taxpayer stumped up £11 million for such a gesture? The answer is that the British Council is not only staying in Hong Kong after the handover, but expanding its operations throughout China.

Better known overseas than at home, the British Council was founded more than 60 years ago as a propaganda agency and has developed into a global cultural mission. In 1948 its Hong Kong operation was set up in a couple of Nissen huts, and its principal job remains the teaching of English. This not only spreads English-language culture globally, but also earns Britain £7 billion a year and opens

Hong Kong and China now constitute the prime target for the council's cultural ambitions. "The arts are vital to us. and not just as a safety valve when all other outlets have been repressed; they are of long-term benefit politically and economically," says Tom Buchanan, director of the British Council in Hong Kong. "If you want to project an image of Britain's connection with the event-garde and innovation, which we must here, it's through the arts that you can do it. So we must play that card for all it's worth. The council's apolitical nature is sacred. Next door to the new building is the British Consulate which will be our diplomatic presence, and Bu-chanan had to insist that the flagpole which was to have stood equidistant between the two should be moved as far away from the council build-

Hong Kong has anticipated the shift for years without quite knowing the implications. "Nobody overplays the political changeover," says Lo King Man, director of the Academy for Performing Arts, which was founded in 1986 with British Council help. "But perhaps we didn't move last enough to distinguish our own cultural identity. The line between Western and Oriental culture is not all that clear."

The APA is a partner in one of the most ambitious artistic events of the changeover, negotiations are looking good with Nottingham Playhouse for its Animal Farm.

Each of the outlying New Territories communities has its own theatre of around 1,800 seats, hosting the likes of the National Youth Music Theatre, the Philharmonia and the Halle. But in June the high-light is likely to be the latest work of the collaborative English-Chinese company Chung Ying Theatre, with a children's play by the English lecturer Dino Mahoney about a child's flight through time from 19thcentury Britain to modern Hong Kong on the back of a dragon. It is one of eight productions that Chung Ying has scheduled for this year, subsidised by the new Hong Kong Arts Development Council, which is modelled on the Arts Council of England.

After the Chinese New Year in February the Hong Kong Arts Festival begins, bringing the RSC's Midsummer Night's Dream and - a surprise box-office success the opera Marco Polo, commissioned by the Edinburgh Festival but so far never performed there. Kau Ng. the lestival's executive director, is cautiously optimistic. "Some in the arts community may have worries about what will happen, that more Chinese arts will be forced on us, but we have been told it is the intention to keep the system here as it is. The importance of the British Council in this has been longstanding and we are looking long into the future with them." And what of the spread into China? The British Council has offices in Peking and Shanghai, and a third opens this summer in Guangdong, formerly Canton.

glowering at them. It is CoisCéim's self-appointed task to take in hand popular notions of contemporary Irish dance and lead them into fresh territory, far from any showbizzy Celtic extravaganza. The company's approach has been to create work that might as easily be called physical theatre as dance. Hit and Run, their latest production, does contain passages of straight-ish dance, but even then dancers are as likely to be moving to the sound of distant gunshots. police sirens or movie dialogue. copter (Conor Kelly and Sam Park) are the key here, their crisp, clear 3D found sounds setting the tone, defining the space in which the dancers work every bit as much as Stephen McManus's cage of thin, bright light, or the cut-up video projections.

The strong setting provides an apt platform for some equally exciting work from CoisCeim's dancers. A sex scene hecomes a hilarious and surreal whiripool of apologics and intertwined limbs: a joust between the male and female cast members leaves David Bolger (choreographer of the piece) hunched on the floor covered in blood, pleading for help that never arrives. Particularly outstanding was Simone Litchfield, who danced with a degree of arrogant funkiness startling even here, where that quality

Hit and Run's most obvi ous shortcoming was that while taking on the subjects of urban Dublin, the piece never explored them in any real sense. Instead. Bolger's choreography uses crime and violence as a springboard producing any number of great moments, without ever taking an authorial line. If Irish dance really is growing up, it may have to take more responsibility for its actions.

The world's best flamenco guitarist - probably - is in his second home for a concert season. Joanna Pitman reports

Pena was never taught flamenco — in fact, he claims it is virtually impossible to teach it Rather it is a sort of frame of mind, a natural instinct. Peña himself has the prototype flamenco background; his life has been moulded with the single intention of rising out of the poverty of his birth.

He grew up in a family of nine children, sharing a house with ten other families in Cordoba, "We were poor, we were crowded. But we had a sort of communal spirit. Whenever there was a feast. everyune would sing or dance or play the guitar, improvising as we went along. My elder brother had a guitar and he taught me a few chords when i was six. VICKY FEATHERSTONE assistant director and the

Profession: New artistic director of the Paines Plough touring theatre company.

How did she get the job? Through an interview: 180 people applied and she convinced the panel that she was more committed to new writing and regional theatre than anyone cisc.

What did she say? Statements such as: "New writing has become increasingly fashionable recently and it is up to Paines Plough to ride the crest of that wave," and: "It is important to create and develop new works to further our literary heritage."

Does she not feel that she might be too young? "1 know it sounds arrogant, but not really. I've done so many different things and I feel that this job ties them all together. I relish the opportunity to stand up and be

What experience has she had? A lot. She studied drama at Manchester University, and after deciding that she was never going to make "a terribly good actress" she turned to direct-

1904 lestival director at the West Yorkshire Playhouse, a project director at Northern Stage in Newcastle, the resident director at the Octagon Theatre in Bolton, and the associate director of the Bush Theatre. What sort of works has she directed? At least 16 plays, ranging from A Christmas Carol to Kvetch and from A Midsummer Night's Dream to The Glass Menagerie. Plenty of new works too.

How about long-term plans? Can we expect her to go to Hollywood? That depends on my bank manager! I loved working in TV, but I realise now that I always want to stay in theatre. I have a huge belief the Brais awards were initiated by the Express three years ago as a response to the pop industry's ailing Brits ceremony. One spin-off from this alternative celebration of modern music is the pre-awards buildup, which includes a week of London shows featuring mostly new and leftfield talents. Kicking off this run iast Saturday night was the Vibes all-nighter at Highbury's Rocket Club, a showcase of experimental dance music anended by 1,200 revellers and a smattering of minor rock stars.

Two years ago, at the first of these Rocket gatherings, the rapid-fire chatter of jungle was a mere sideshow. Since retitled drum-and-bass, this was one of the tantrums for which the singer is developing a reputation after someone threw beer at the stage. However stupid the incident, his response was petulant and equally reprehensible. Thankfully, Robinson swiftly apologised and the Crowes got back on track.

Less appealing

The average age of the largely student audience was early twenties, and most of the band's young followers would probably laugh if you told them that the Stones were once the greatest live rock'n'roll band in the world. The rest of us were left sighing over the memories the Black Crowes brought back.

Flying solos

Andrew Hill Oueen Elizabeth Hall

ALTHOUGH the planist Andrew Hill is among the most prominent survivors of Blue Note's 1960s heyday, he does not fit easily into any of the musical categories — chief among them hard bop or soul jazz - most frequently associated with the label. His music has always been highly individual, relying for its considerable effect on almost imperceptible shifts of rhythm and timbre.

His following is small but passionate, and the London-based branch was out in force for this concert, drawn not only by the rareness of Hill's British gigs in recent years, but by a presti-gious rhythm section. Bassist Reggie Workman is best remembered for his work with John Coltrane, but has lately-become one of pianist Marilyn Crispell's most sympathetic collaborators, while Pheeroan aklaff, a crisp, versatile drummer, is as at home with straightahead jazz or even reggae as with the more adventurous music of the likes of Oliver Lake or Henry Threanglil.

The trio began as it meant to go on: with a free-sounding but tightly organised three-way improvisation spun from a relatively simple central motif. The customary head-solos-head structure of much jazz was eschewed in favour of a variety of approaches: solos might spiral off a repeated bass figure, or rumbling improvisations might suddenly coalesce into sombre melodies. Throughout, however, the music was kept tight and cogent.

Hill's is a rich, almost cluttered sound in which silence, sudden but subtle dynamic and textural shifts, and odd splashes of instrumental colour are more important than overt virtuosity. His music is thus often regarded as difficult; the standing ovation the trio received on completing their 80-minute set was therefore all the more welcome.

Epic hymn to a Renaissance man

OPERA: As Covent Garden rehearses Palestrina, Ian Brunskill meets the director of Pfitzner's masterpiece

f ever an opera needed saving from its defenders, it is Hans Pfitzner's Palestrina. Premiered in Munich in 1917, and receiving its first fully professional British staging next week at Covent Garden; it has long been revered by those who fin the words of one of their bogeymen, Pierre Boulez) "suffer from a nostalgia for the past as a paradise lost [and] react violently against a future that seems to them to be a terrifying nightmare". Which has rather tended to put off everyone else... It certainly put off Nikolaus Lehnhoff, at least at first. Now in his late fifties, but with the energy and enthusiasm of a man two decades younger, the German di-rector is best known to British audiences for the outstanding Janaček cycle he began ten years ago at-Glyndebourne. His Munich pro-duction of Hans Werner Henze's Prince of Homburg was also seen at English National Opera last year, and it was the British premiere of the same composer's Das verratene Meer that he originally planned to do at Covent Garden. When that idea ran into problems, he was surprised to be asked by the Royal Opera's Nicholas Payne if hewould like to tackle Palestrina

"My first reaction was: Palestrina? Er ... yes. It's a German opera. My second was: please can I go away and think about itt"

Lehnhoff blames Pützner himself for the work's rather gloomy reputation. The composer's character, he says, "has done his music no good". Insecure, quarrelsome and ambitious, Plitzner was "caught between so many stools". His polemical conservatism and nationalism spiritual and idealistic at first, but increasingly politicised by the First World War — cannot be overlooked, but they have covered up what is interesting in his work; there are so many things that you have to push aside if you want to

It is an essence well worth

has a brilliant text, by the composer himself, and it's first-rate mus For Thomas Mann, one of its earliest and most ardent admirers, Palestrina marked the end of an era - a last, late product of a 19thcentury tradition, the funeral hymn of Romantic opera. In it, and in its view of artistic inspira-tion. Mann discerned a "sympathy with death", which Lehnhoff explains as a "very 19th-century, very German idea of getting your spiritual roots from something which doesn't exist, which was there but which is now gone. So that you have to establish something inside yourself to make up for it."

ut that, Lehnhoff feels, is only half the story. Pfuzner had an uneasy relationship with moder-nity, and he dramatises it in his (fictional) account of the 16thcentury composer Palestrina's reto the debates about musical innovation that accompanied the Council of Trent. But Palestrina - not least for the selfconsciousness with which it considers what is possible and desirable in contemporary music — is a powerfully modern opera; to Bruno Walter, 30 years after he conducted the first performance, it remained "one of the mightlest stage works of the century:

Lehnhoff had known of the work and its composer since childhood, but they "had never been part of my musical or artistic life". An elderly aunt of his had witnessed and told him of the occasion in Strasbourg when Pfitzner, as music director, had had to step in for an indisposed Beckinesser midway through Mei-stersinger: and as a student in Vienna and Munich, he had seen Palestrina several times himself. But he had always been impressed less by the work than by the great performers it attracted: Julius Pazzk, Christa Ludwig, Sena Jurinac, Fritz Wunderlich and Hans Hotter (Who once said

"Whatever its influences, Palestrina has its own musical impetus," says Nikolaus Lehnhoff, "It's not Wagnerian or Straussian. It's not atmospheric: it's archaic music"

The difficulty of fielding singers of that calibre throughout the opera's huge cast is one of the obstacles facing any new staging: but with the highly regarded American-born tenor Thomas Moser making his Covent Garden debut in the title role, and a supporting line-up that includes Thomas Allen, Kurt Rydl, Sergei Leiferkus and Nicolai Gedda, the Royal Opera looks set to meet that particular challenge.

Meeting the work's other chal-lenges is Lehnhoff's problem. vent Garden's last venture unto Pfizzier's Cardinal Borromeo was the darker corners of the German discovering, he insists, "Palestrina" his favourite role after Wotan). repertory was with another classic impose your style; the style must content reflects Meistersinger."

"Künstlerdrama", Hindemith's Mathis der Maler: a work which, like Palestrina, explores - through a fictionalised account of a historical artist's life — the relationship between art and the world in which it is made. On that occasion, a baffling and boring production did a rarely seen opera less than justice, as Hindemith's score was buried beneath the banal obsessions of the director, Peter Sellars. Lehnhoff is anxious to avoid a similar mistake. He has never cultivated a recognisable directoriature". "You always have to look first into the work. Do not reflects Parsifal, but a lot of the come out of the piece. I learnt that from Wieland Wagner — I was his last assistant at Bayreuth - though you might not immediately associate it with him.

"First of all," he says, "you have to tell the story." Especially when the work is unfamiliar. He relishes the challenge of introducing an audience to a piece it may not know. "It helps me to look anew at

In Germany Palestrina is too often viewed through a veil of picty, which Lehnhoff was determined to What is needed is "less Schopenhauer and more Freud*, if Palestrina's epic structure is to be brought to theatrical life. Otherwise, "the whole thing just floats away". Lehnhoff refuses to be perturbed by Pfitzner's diatribes against musical "futurism". "Today you get the sense that there was this total conflict between separate camps. But it was not so clear-cut. Pfitzner conducted Mahler and Mahler conducted him: he invited Schoenberg to conduct his own pieces in Strasbourg, and Schoenberg delenged hun after the Second World — of its own time, and of ours, had to agree that he was a master.

Nobody mentions that." The image of Pfitzner valiantly defending tradition against the onslaughts of his iconuclastic contemporaries does less than justice to his music's originality. "Whatever its influences, it has its own impetus." Lehnhoff says. '"It's not Wagnerian or Straussian. It's not atmospheric music; it's archaic, expressive music. In that it's closer to Schoenberg. It's not the music of the 19th century." Even as it looks to the past, Plitzner's masterpiece is Certainly, although Mozart's Sonata in F, K 376, was scarcely the kind of work she could identity with, Franck's Sonata in A excited much expressive spontaneity in both the violinist and her hard-pressed pianist. It was just a pity that, tiring towards the end of the recital, she allowed her intonation to wander off-centre. CHICKET

England aiming to expand on hosts' limited horizons

FROM ALAN LEE, CRICKET CORRESPONDENT, IN AUCKLAND

THE fact that England appear latest in a bewildering seable to beat New Zealand even quence of New Zealand coachwhen they can beat almost nobody else preys heavily on the national psyche here. Of all the significant nations in the cricket world. New Zealand stand alone in treating England with a deference they hardly deserve.

Since the start of the 1990s. England have lost nine Test series and won only five. Three of those victories have: come against New Zealand: 1-0 in each of the short home series in 1990 and 1994 and 2-0 in the last three-match: rubber in this country.

years since New Zealand won a Test match against England, which may help to explain the local pessimism with a new series about to begin. Whether or not it was valid to claim that England carried a superiority complex to Zimbabwe, the issue does not arise here. It is New Zealand suffering the complex and it is one born of inferiority.

Events on this tour have . reinforced the feeling. Eng-land have become bad travellers of late, apparently unable to adapt to alien conditions, yet here, where the climate, the culture and the pitches are evocative of home, they win routinely. The players are content here; they expect to win. One senses that most of

New Zealand expects it, too. The mood was summed up yesterday by Blair Pocock, who captained the Northern Districts side beaten inside three days by the touring team. Pocock will open the New Zealand batting on Friday, but he was not exactly talking a good game when he said: "I've seen all their... bowlers now and they are a es, is to instil greater self-belief. He began by having to overcome reserument that the post had gone to an Austra-lian, but his methods and man-management are now

Rixon, the Australia wicketkeeper for 13 Tests up to 1985 and more recently a successful coach of New South Wales has called on two of New Zealand cricket's role models, Martin Crowe and Sir Richard Hadlee, for help. Such men would have excelled in any era but, since their departure, New Zealand have not come close to replacing

The role models now are the likes of Stephen Fleming and Simon Doull; players whose popularity is based more on tashion and espectation than solid accomplishments. Apart from the charismatic Chris Cairns, the New Zealand side lacks star quality and the shallowness of the talent pool is expressed by the continued presence in the team of Dipak Patel, 38, and the fact that Roger Twose would be an automatic selection had he not declared himself unavailable. Neither was near to England selection before opting for a new nationality.

The problems are exacerbated by the attempts of the marketing men, prevalent. here, to create a new audience for tricket. The effect has been If that hints at fatalism, it - to deflect the attention of the

It is not just the one-day internationals foisted upon the national team, nor even the domestic Shell Cup limitedovers league, that have occupied them since early December. Just to add to the unhelpful distractions. New Zealand now play something

This is the brainchild, if it can be dignified as such, of Crowe and it involves, believe it or not, completing a two-innings match inside 312 hours. Each innings lasts ten overs and double runs can be scored for straight hits passing between two flag-waving sentries, so that teams think nothing of chasing 30 or more in the final over.

The games are staged on Sunday afternoons and are doubtless great fun to watch in a frenetic, athletic, unsophisticated way. They bear little resemblance to the real thing, however, and, as they are often scheduled between days of a first-class fixture, do little for a player's technical

Cricket may be heading this way all over the world, with some places just moving more slowly than others, but the impression is that New Zealand are hotfooting it to an untapped market for the new millennium. Even their regulation one-day games are now subject to mid-match "entertainment" that would make Long Room moustaches twirl. Amid such contrivance and cabaret, Test cricket is in danger of losing its identity in New Zealand and it will be fascinating to see how the public responds in Auckland this coming weekend. Many, I suspect, will prefer to wait for the one-day jamboree next month - not just because a party comes with the package, but because there is a confidence that New Zealand can

Bledsoe aims to keep date with eternity

Oliver Holt on the talented quarterback

determined to fulfil his potential at last n hour in New Orleans Blanche Dubois says in A Streetcar Named Desire, is not just an hour but "a little piece of eternity dropped imo your hands". On Sunday evening, at the Louisiana Su-perdome here, the pieces will not be so much dropping as hurding into outstretched palms, propelled there by the arm of Drew Bledsoe.

Bledsoe is a young man for whom the words of Tennessee Williams have more relevance than most. A quarterback who was promised eternity before his professional career with New England Patriots had really started, he seemed to have had it ripped away when the critics turned on him last season and said that they must have been mistaken about his nascent greatness.

In four days, though, when the Patriots take on Green Bay Packers in Super Bow! XXXI. Bledsoe, 24, could win it all back. If he can inspire his team to a surprise victory over the Packers and do what he has hardly ever done before, by performing to his potential in a crucial game, he will finally establish himself as the leader of the new generation of quarterbacks, the heir to Don Marino, Jim Kelly and John Elway.

"This is the chance for me to prove that I am a great player." Bledsoe said yesterday, "When people look back, they class great quarterbacks as the ones who have played well in Super Bowls and won Super Bowls.

"Statistics and touchdown passes and how many interceptions you threw; those are things that are looked at from day to day and from week to week. When they look back ten years from now, nobody is going to remember what my passing efficiency rating was during the season, but they will say: 'Hey, he had a great game in the Super Bowi. This is the ultimate showcase."

Bledsoe possesses an arm so strong that his team-mates say he could throw the ball across the Mississippi as it wends its way lugubriously through the city towards its delta. The Patriots rely on that arm and. if Bledsoe does not play well on Sunday, the Packers will win the Super Bowl.

It has been that way since New England made Bledsoe the No I pick in the college draft of 1993. He excelled in his first season and in his second he led the National Football League in passing with 4,555 yards, quickly becoming the voungest player to pass for more than 10,000 yards.

New England knew a jewel when they saw one and made him one of the highest-paid handing him a seven-year contract extension worth $42 million (about £25 million). That was when the trouble started. Two dislocated shoulders disrupted last season and he lost his confidence. In 1995 he was the lowest-rated quarterback in the American Foot-

players in the league by

Maybe when I signed the contract," Bledsoe said, "I felt a little like I was making as much as 15 players, so I tried to do more than just my job. Instead of playing like I always had. I started to think about what more I could do. At the start of this season 1 realised it was time to get back to what I am."

His instincts will have to be pin sharp, his arm at its strongest, if the Patriots are to beat the Packers, who, as belits the National Football Conference champions, are prohibitive favourites. Green Bay, with their own gifted quarterback, Bren Favre, rarely fail to put a healthy quota of points on the board and the onus will be on Bledsoe to provide the riposte.

Te is not a running, scrambling quarter-back. When he gets the ball, he tends to stay where he is, in the pocket formed by his offensive linemen, waiting to throw to an available receiver. This season the magic has returned. He led the Patriots to Il wins out of 16 games in the regular season and destroyed Pittsburgh Steelers in the first of the play-offs with an early passing barrage.

He has also been helped by the development of the rookie wide receiver. Terry Glenn. the continued excellence of the tight end, Ben Coates, and the mellowing of his relationship with Bill Parcells, the hot-tempered New England coach.

Some critics have accused him of losing his nerve when he is confronted with onrushing defensive linemen. At the end of last season, one of the Boston newspapers called him a little weenie who can't cope under pressure". Reggie White, the most fearsome of the Packers who will line up against Bledsoe, hinted at the same thing. "When he's hot, he's hot." White said. "But if you can get some pressure on him, you can get him rattled."

Even that problem, though, should be possible for Bledsoe to solve. A native of Walla Walla, Washington State, he has the unflappable air of a laid-back country boy and his wife, Mara, says he has taught her patience. If he is protected a little from White and his cohorts, that patience should see him through.

Mere desire should not be his destination. Like Blanche, Bledsoe may be bound for and country club hotel, usually home to the Cheshire Set, is also accustomed to providing a base for leading teams. Germany used it in the summer and yesterday so did Stockport County, preparing for their Coca-Cola Cup quarter-final against Southampton tunight.

It was not a one-off. Stockport have been using Mottram Hall, with its custorn-laid pitch - a replica of Wembley - throughout the cold spell. "People might say little old Stockport', but we still try to do the same things as Premiership clubs, to stay in nice hotels and have good training facilities." Dave Jones, the manager, said.

That shows how things have changed. A few years ago. The Times ran a series about the special difficulties of small. impecunious clubs living in the shadows of the game's giants. Tranmere Rovers and Stockport were almost archetypal examples.

Now Tranmere are an established first division club and Stockport are bidding to join them under Jones, a bubbly Merseysider. There is a spenking new stand at Edgeley Park, once one of the Football League's most downat-heel venues, and progress on the field has been equally

"We've got a lot of stability in the club, we don't have to sell to survive." Jones said. The ground is being modernised and we feel we've got a squad which can take us into the first division."

The club began making strides under Danny Bergara. their passionate Uruguayan manager. Under Jones, they have won a reputation as a footballing side, although he ascribes that partly to the sale

But now I haven't, so I've brought in the likes of Tom Bennett and Chris Marsden, who aren't going to hoof it, Jones said. He has taken advantage of the Bosman ruling to bring in his Portuguese midfield player. Luis Cavaco, whom he predicts will become a "big player". Cavaco may not be the only one.

When we put out our libest players. I think all 11 could play in the Premiership - not as a team, but all of them could lit into Premiership teams and do a job," Jones said

Blackburn Rovers and West Ham United have already discovered their quality this season. Will Southampton be next? Stockport supporters certainly believe so. They expect you to win every game now," Jones said. "but for us to win against Southampton, every player has got to perform to the best of his ability, and then hope that Southampton don't. We aren't going out to show them we're just as good, we have to be ourselves. That's what we've done in the past rounds. If you aren't a dribbler, don't dribble; if you're a good passer, then pass. That's all we've tried to do." Live television coverage adds extra spice to the

Bookmaker may be worth gamble

BY RUSSELL KEMPSON

MICHAEL TABOR is a wealthy bookmaker — is there a poor one? — and a lifelong West Ham United supporter. He recently offered a £30 million injection to the FA Carling Premiership club and, in return, requested a place on the board. West Ham thought about it and politely declined.

After the 2-0 defeat by Leeds

United at Upton Park on Monday, which confirmed the side's slide into the bottom three of the Premiership, West Ham should perhaps reconsider Tabor's offer. A swift infusion of money may be their only way out.

West Ham, beset by injuries and bereft of ideas, were nathetic. That Leads were not much better, yet still won comfortably, illustrates the alarming situation at Upton Park. Even Harry Redknapp, the West Harn manager, is feeling the heat. It was the first time this season that the normally patient supporters had called for his head.

Peter Storrie, the club's managing director, was targeted, too. He is aware of the growing unrest yet defended the board's decision to turn down Tabor's offer. "We have to investigate all our options." he said. "Michael is not the only benefactor to have expressed an interest in the club.

There is also an American husinesaman who is interested in becoming involved in Premiership football and has a substantial amount of money available. It would be silly to dive in and accept the first offer that is tabled." Redictapp spent £4 million on players during the summer but has seen little return for the investment. A tally of 18 goals from 22 matches is the worst in the Premiership and with lain Dowie injured, Tony Cottee sold and Florin Raducioiu back at Español, his options for trying to improve that record are limited. He is trying to rectify the problem, pursuing Pierre van Hooijdonk, of Holland and Celtic, and Dean Holdsworth, of Wimbledon, but asking prices are exorbitant. Celtic want £4.5 million for Van Hooijdank, though they might accept it in instalments, and Wimbledon are unlikely to agree to much less than 64 million for Holdsworth. Each player has had his

He had not received the necessary clearance from his club or the Scottish Football Association and now faces a possible suspension. Holdsworth's tangled pri-vate life has received much public scrutiny recently. He has started only seven matches for Wimbledon this season. Can West Ham finance a deal, anyway? Redknapp admits that the well is running dry. Perhaps it is time for them to study the formbook, take a chance and ring their book-

Deportivo take action against Toshack

FROM TUNKU VARADARAJAN IN MADRID

DEPORTIVO La Coruña announced yesterday that they had begun "full disciplinary proceedings" against John Toshack, the Spanish club's manager, after he swore at his own side's supporters in the dying moments of the first half of Deportivo's home match against Athletic Bilbao on Sunday. Deportivo scored to lead 2-1 and Toshack leapt to his feet to sainte the goal. Immediately, a wave of whisties and jeers from local fans drowned out all other sounds in the Rizzor stadium. Toshack spun round, hands flapping in mock ovation. In full sight of the television cameras, he yelled: "Aplaudid ahora;

hijos de puta," or "Clap now, you sons of buches." Toshack's exhortation so incensed Augusto Cesar Lendoiro, the club's president, that he made straight for the dressing room after the drawn game. Yesterday, Lendoiro announced disciplinary proceedings which could see the Welshman fined or, curiously, "suspended for a game.

The graffiti outside the stadium is no more friendly. Toshack go home", it screeches Much of the city detests Toshack, and it is increasingly clear that he does not care for La Coruña much either.

But he is an old Spain hand: asked if the barracking hurts, he merely says:
"That's what they pay me for." Not for much longer, though, it would seem:
Toshack and that he did not see himself staying on at the club beyond the end of the

Yet there are some Deportivo supporters who would be sorry to see Toshack go. Ricardo López Mosteiro, 42. a well-known La Coruña lawyer, believes that the criticism of the Welshman is "unfair and hysterical". I have been a Deportive fan all my life," he said, and I speak for many others. Toshack is a good man and a good manager. The press is out to get him because he doesn't believe in sweet talking them all the time. But I think it would be a shame if he left

When play restarted, Kelvin Kercow, the Australian who won the Welsh Masters at Llanelli last week, came down to earth with a bump, losing 7-6, 7-5, 7-3 to Greg Harlow, of Ely. in the first round of the singles.

The biggest surprise of the day came when the World Indoor Bowls Council announced the resignation, for health reasons, of its secretary, Jenny Davidson, who was involved in negotiations with the Professional Bowls Association over the formation of the World Bowls Tour.

Makinen rallies

Motor rallying: Tommi Makinen, the world champion, took command of the Monte Carlo rally yesterday as Colin McRae, of Britain, crashed out. Brilliant driving in wet, sometimes icy, conditions enabled the Finn to move 13 seconds ahead of Carlos Sainz, the overnight leader. after four of the six timed stages on the penultimate day. McRae, the former champion, broke the rear left suspension of his new Subaru Impreza and damaged the steering when he went off the road on the 33km first stage.

Duncan's deal

Skilling: British teams could receive £350,000 over five years under a sponsorship deal announced by Ronald (Boris) Duncan, the former British No I downhill racer. He will donate 10 per cent of all the hospitality revenue received by Cambridge Blues, his company, from the British Ski Federation.

Sevens down

Rugby league: Wigan will not defend their Middlesex Sevens title at Twickenham on May 17. The club has declined the invitation in order to concentrate on its Super League commitments. St Helens have also turned down an offer to take part.

SHEEHAN on BRIDGE

Henri Svarc, aged 68, was a member of the France team that won the 1996 Olympiad. He has played in twelve European championships, winning five of them — a remarkable record. You can see him in action with Marc Bompis in the Macallan International Pairs which starts today. In this match from the round robin, a Swedish player found a good play against Svarc and Multon. Dealer West Love all +944 75 +264 #AQ7432 4A9872

Contract: 3 NT by South, Lead: three of hearts Svarc opened One Spade on the West hand. North over-called Two Clubs and South (Magnus Eriksson) bid 3 NT. Eriksson won the heart lead in hand and played a spade to the queen. It seemed almost certain from the bidding that West would have the three aces: if the clubs divided South could set up his ninth trick by playing a spade or diamond. But what if the clubs didn't Eriksson realised that it would not cost to run the eight of diamonds -- if it lost to the jack or ten in the West hand. West could not do any harm declarer could just set up his ninth trick in either spades or diamonds, relying on the club break. But playing the diamonds like that was a spectac ular success when East turned up with the jack and ten declarer was able to set up three tricks in the suit, and so had nine tricks even though the chibs didn't break. □ Several world champions are among the 16 pairs who will be playing in the Macallan International Pairs 1997 that starts today (until Friday) at The White House Hotel, Albany Street, London NWI. You can watch at the tables or in the Viewgraph. theatre. (niormation: 0181-578

Festival options kept open for Sanmartino

SANMARTINO kept his. Cheltenham Festival aspira-tions intact with a workmanlike victory in the Croxton. Park Novices' Hurdle at Leicester yesterday. The colt jumped competently in the hands of Adrian Maguire. although whether this performance merits a tilt at the Champion Hurdle remains open to question. At least Sanmartino, a smart stayer on the Flat, fared better than Moonax, the dual St Leger winner, who was comfortably outpaced in the closing stages. Moonax finished third over the minimum two miles and his own Cheltenham prospects now rest over longer trips. The six-year-old ran in snatches for Richard Dunwoody; he remains an entire and may be losing his concentration.

tively. Nevertheless, it would be unwise to judge Sanmartino solely on this evidence. The horse's best Flat form was gained on a fast surface, the going at Leicester, officially good to soft, was rated sticky by the jockeys.

Furthermore, Nicholson's string has been detained more than most by the cold spell. Sanmartino will almost certainly improve - both for the outing and from the experi-ence he gained on this, his second start over hurdles. "He will definitely have another outing before Cheltenham." Nicholson's assistant. Alan King, said. "He never does a lot when he hits the front and the great thing about him is that he is loving it." Tim Forster, the stalwart of jumps racing who trains the runner-up, can rarely have split runners owned by Khaled Abdulla and Sheikh

Moonax carries. "High In The Clouds is a nice horse but when I saw this field I was horrified," he said. He also endorsed the quality of the contest, labelling it as good a novice hurdle as he has seen for some time. "I thought mine would run well, but that was above expectations," he said. Interest in Sanmartino as a is heightened by the excellent record of high-class Flat re-cruits at Cheltenham. Kribensis, Royal Gait and Alderbrook have claimed the prize in the last seven renewals, but Sanmartino - like Moonax. trained on the Flat by Barry Hills — must progress consid erably to join that trio. The time to judge him will be on his next start. Meanwhile, Collier Bay remains a besipriced 7-2 to follow up last year's victory in hurdling's Blue Riband.

Underwood secures place in cup final

By DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

RORY UNDERWOOD, who lost his club place and his England position this season. will play for Leicester in the final of the Heineken Cup. against Brive in Cardiff on Saturday. He appears in his familiar left-wing berth in preference to Leon Lloyd, the teenager who made such an impact in the early rounds of the competition. Moreover, the Leicester selectors have resisted the temptation to find a place in the back row for Eric Miller, who played so well for Ireland against France last weekend. Miller was a candidate for any one of the three positions, but it would have been a considerable surprise if he had ousted John Wells, Neil Back or Dean

Richards, the club captain. Underwood, 33 and the winner of 85 England caps. found himself out of favour with Bob Dwyer, the Leicester director of rugby, in mid-autumn. He has started only one of Leicester's European games, the pool match against Scottish Borders, and missed a series of league games, but his response will have pleased

Dwyer. That Underwood has a testimonial year coming up will have provided an extra spur. but the wing's pride and ambition have been significant factors in his improve ment, demonstrated clearly with two tries against Harle quins just after Christmas.

Underwood is likely to oppose Gerald Fabre rather than Sebastien Carrat, the competition's leading try-scorer with eight, who is the Brive left

The final is expected to be shown on television in 86 countries to an audience in excess of 35 million. There are indications that Leicester's travelling support will ensure a bigger attendance at the Arms Park than the 22,000 who watched Cardiff lose to Toulouse in the inaugural final last year.

Football will not stand for return to terraces

'em? The latest brainwave from the political front is a call to bring back the terracing at Premiership football clubs. Remember Hillsborough? We all do, alas, but not, it appears. Tom Pendry, Labour's Shadow Sports Minister.

No. perhaps I do him an injustice. It seems that the event does strike a chord somewhere. But we need not worry about a repeat, he says, because nuclear scientists — not a class remarkable for its record in saving human life - have come up with a "crowd pressure monitoring system". So when you cram 'em in like cattle, at least with this device you will know all about it.

Now obviously this scores Pendry a cheap point from enthusiasts for nostalgia and lovers of "atmosphere". But it is hopelessly out of touch with football, the police and, for that matter, the Labour Party. The interesting thing about the business is not the old chestnut of standing versus sitting -I can't remember who it was who said that the only person who can sing sitting down is Val Doonican but the extraordinary ineptitude of politicians when it comes to sport.

Briefly, Pendry's plan, apart from

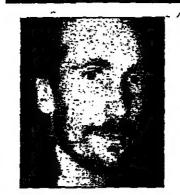

oliticians! Don't you just love the superficial appeal of his salt-ofthe earthery, cuts right against everything that football now is. It is no longer a working class ritual. It is a fashionable and bloated plutocracy. The introduction of all-seat stadiums was intended to prevent another disaster, and you could hardly quarrel with the principle.

As a secondary matter, it was to attack hooliganism. "We don't want your hooligans in our stadiums," Ted Croker, then secretary of the Football Association, said to Margaret Thatcher. Thatcher, another politician made to look a fool by sport, was enraged. She responded with a policy of implacable hostility to football, spearheaded by her failed attempt to introduce the Orwellian membership card scheme.

Football solved the hooliganism problem without Thatcher, but by pure Thatcherism. It priced the hooligans out of the market. All-seat stadiums changed the entire demog-raphy of football-watching. You need to be a good deal richer than you used to: young men of the fighting ages. what used to be the call-up ages, cannot afford to go.

Football certainly does not wish to go back towards its former troubles

SIMON BARNES

in deference to this strange alliance between a politician and nuclear science. Economic science will do for them. True, the bill for that viewpoint will come in eventually, for there is a bill for everything in the end. The bill for the policy of "sell it cheap and cram 'em in" was paid in human life. The bill for the present plutocracy will be paid in a lesser currency: in disillusion, in the loss of attention of the followers of fashion, in the alienation of the people of football's heardand. Football is a South Sea Bubble of heady finance. Of course the bubble will burst, and of course football will survive, in a less glitzy form. But right now, neither football directors nor football crowds want the terraces back. And for those who love standing and Bovril, there are plenty of salt-of-the-earth clubs outside the Premiership and the first division. Go to Barnet a good day out, and one that will never suffer the slings and arrows of fashion.

The eccentric thing about the Pendry proposal is that he seems so out of kilter with the Labour Party. But it is ever thus when politicians get involved with sport. A specialised approach to any subject always stops you seeing things whole, and politi-cians tend to see everything as a matter of personal power and party faction. That is why the politicians' tendency is to trivialise, and when it comes to sport, they manage at the same time to trivialise a triviality while failing to comprehend sport's genuine importance.

Politicians are famous for grasping the wrong end of the stick. They also seek control: and the joyous thing to control. Ask Adolf Hitler, He staged the Berlin Olympics: Jesse Owens said more about Nazism than a thousand moralists.

In this country, politicians are also eager to be associated with success. The European championship finals of last summer were interpreted as an attempt by John Major to recreate the national "feel-good" factor of the World Cup-winning summer of 1966. The honours list is always full of athletes, because it makes the prime minister look like a good sport.

Politicians also love to dissociate themselves publicly from sporting failures. The poor performance of the England cricket team in Zimbabwe was a glorious excuse for various politicians to talk about "national disgrace", "send 'em home" and so-

Sport, being a volatile business. depending more on the talent and mood of an individual rather than of a nation, regularly makes politicians look fools. Not that that makes sport unique. The cry used to be: "Keep politics out of sport." It would be a start if we could just keep politicians out. Sport, after all, is about wild and impossible dreams.

Fresh Air. Kaalo 4, 8. 3. 4. 5. 1. The media are often accused of being open only to professionals: this new series is an impressive response. Fresh Air is the product of a BBC appeal to media students to send in their own radio features and tonight it starts with a tape by Emma Hancora called The Dream Sequence. It is innovative in style, using echo effectively (if occasionally overmuch) and there are some interesting scientific contributions about dreams and their role in the five stages of sleep. Another of tonight's tapes, Nightshift, is by Julian Powrys and records the work of an all-female ambulance crew on night duty in London. All the work in the order amount is into ressive enough to keep London: All the work in the programme is impressive enough to keep established programme-makers on their toes.

Mike Harding's Yorkshire Dales. Radio 2, 9.00pm. This is not so much a travel story as a love story and it has the incidental benefit of making one wonder whether the Whitehall obsession with boundary changes is an attempt to ensure that British children leave school with no idea as to where they live. Harding is that rare Lancastrian, a man who wishes he had been born in Yorkshire. He koves the Dales and has done so since childhood. He now lives in Dentdale, the focus of this programme. The only problem being that Dentdale is actually in Cumbria, but the avuncular Harding correctly ignores this. People there think they live in the Dales: they think, therefore they are

Moya wins undercover campaign

From Michael Henderson in melbourne

THE heatwave that has paralysed Melbourne this week and caused hundreds of fires across the neighbouring bushland ended late yesterday afternoon when the northerly wind changed direction and the temperature dropped. The evening turned out to be cool and rain is forecast for today, with conditions reverting to normal for the rest of the tournament.

It was so hot yesterday morning, however, that the retractable roof at Melbourne Park was closed for the first time. Neither of the Spaniards who contested the first match "indoors" on an air-conditioned Centre Court, Carlos Moya and Felix Mantilla, was consulted before the decision was p-3 and will meet Michael Chang, the conqueror of Tim Henman, in the semi-finals.

In the evening on Centre Court, with the roof open, Mary Pierce, the French Canadian who won the women's title here two years ago, beat Sabine Appelmans, the Belgian left-hander, to secure a vemi-final confrontation with Amanda Coetzer. Pierce lost the first set 6-1 but rullied to take the second 6-4 and, after being 3-0 down in the third, she finished strongly to win in three minutes over two hours.

She is such an infuriating actress. In the first game alone there were five twists of her ponytail and when she was not rearranging her headband she was demanding a towel from the ballboys. All the time she played to the gallery. shooting looks of surprise. disdain and delight to the spectators, not all of whom were taken by this show. If you can imagine a hybrid of Little Bo Peep and Vanessa Redgrave at her most mannered then that is Pierce. Like all moderate actresses, she has her claque and they were out in force here, cheering her every shot. Appelmans was more worthy of the crowd's support for the gallantry of her play, but sports crowds ing as they might be. The show pony rides on, but she is heading for a fall.

Appelmans had her chances. At 3-3 in the second set she held two game points on Pierce's service before conceding, and after that she never looked quite the same player. It was a disappointment for her, after she had beaten Conchita Martinez.

Moya, who beat Boris Becker in the first round, is now a match away from the final. He came into the tournament on the back of a good

seizes early edge

AFTER the preliminary examinations yesterday of the pairs and ice dances in the European championships in Paris, the solo skaters are ready to enter the fray, the men with their short programme this afternoon, the women with theirs on Friday

(John Hermessy writes):
The skaters principally under scrutiny are Viacheslav Zagorodniuk, of Ukraine, the vinner in Sofia last year, and Irina Slutskaya, of Russia.

Within this international cauldron, a domestic showdown is also looming. It involves the new British men's champion, Neil Wilson, 18, of Belfast, and Steven Cousins, 24, of Deeside, seven successive times the champion before Wilson dislodged him at Guildford in Cousins's improved his hopes of reversing those positions yesterday when he finished fifth in group B during the qualifying competition, with Wilson tenth. Qualifying, however, is capable of laying false trails.

At the sharp end, Zagorodniuk's position seems precarious. He was sixth in qualifying in group A on Sunday, and cannot relish having been upstaged by, among others, Michael among others. Schmerkin, an Israeli of Ukrainian origin. Challengers from group B include Alexei Urmanov, the Olympic champion from Russia. As for Slutskaya, she has most to fear from her compatriot, Maria Butyrskaya.

Oxford linguistics and succeeding only in unsettling his subject still further ("I never attended a place of learning myself"), Isaacs quickly-succumbed to the inevitable subject of the Pinter pause. There are words and there are silences between words?" Yes. Terrible question. Good answer.

saacs tried again. "And is there silence within the words?" Toe-curling question, rewarded with complex but not uninteresting answer about "the silence of fear - fear of being known, of know-ledge, of intimacy. So, began Isaacs - going for the big one - if we use words to protect ourselves, "do your characters mean what they say or does what they say conceal what they mean?" Goodness, even the Cheshire Cat would have had trouble with that. But for those interested, I think the answer was ... a bit of both. Eventually, and after a more successful section dealing with the playwright's childhood, Isaacs brought the painful process to a cliched close. "Let's end with a silence." Pinter looked relieved and I mourned the umpteen questions that Isaacs failed to ask. Why did you start writing? What do you un-channel schedulers, we never strayed far from the early 1960s. When Pinter was at his most prolific on this side of the Atlantic, the Kennedy years were being brought to an abrupt end on the other. Last night that distinguished Washington veteran Charles Wheeler advanced his own theory about the Kennedy killing. Apparently somebody called Lee Harvey Oswald shor him. Sounds pretty unlikely to me.

Anyway, the result was that Lyndon B. Johnson was sworn in as President, started tape-recording his telephone calls and, 34 years later, Wheeler got the chance to play some of them back to us in Secret History: Hello Mr President (Channel 4). It was a programme that got better as it went along, as we were refamiliarised on. It was Johnson, by the way, who advised Nixon to tape his own phone calls, a delicious nugger that Wheeler left until the end.

Theeler, however, knows his Johnson backwards and proved an ideal guide to the recordings, backed up by a cleverly crafted combination of archive film, recreations and firsthand testimony from secretaries and advisers. This call. Wheeler announced, was "a classic example of Johnson's strong-arm technique". Others illustrated his "craving for praise", or his "dis-trust of Kennedy's inner circle".

With the President's workaholic nature established, one call had him on to the head of the Civil Service seeking "the five smartest, best educated, fastest and prettiest qualifications for women suitable for a very different job: "charming. intelligent, and devoted to the motherland". Tick all three and you had just volunteered for a spot of "bed espionage", the tacky story of which was told in the predictably prurient but well researched Inside Story: The Honeytrap (BBCI).

As has become the norm, former KGB people queued up to talk to tell tales out of the Lubyanka to a Western documentary-maker. Using Russian women to recruit British agents was very difficult, we learnt, until the KGB discovered homosexuality and it suddenbecame a whole lot easier. The Italians and Spanish were easy, but the Dutch were the worst almost impossible to recruit. We were never told why.

A44 CHOICE 1 Alvin Hall's Guide to Successful Investing BBC2, 7.30pm

The smooth-talking New Yorker rounds off his series by looking at what he calls alternative investments. These can be anything from racehorses to fine wines, film posters, fine art photography and West End musicals. It is a lively trawl through an entertaining field, though even the National Lottery would seem to offer more promise of a cutoff fortune. For my expert who is a quick fortune. For an expert who is supposed to pinpoint the good bets, Hall has surprisingly little to offer. On the contrary, he keeps saying how risky his featured investments are. He starts with an ostrich farm which went bust, losing its 4,000 investors 620 million, and even stips in a cautionary tale about the Dutch tulip craze of, wait for it, 1636. After watching Hall the boring old building society account suddenly looks like a good idea.

Travelog: Madrid and Andalucia Channel 4, 8.30pm

Regular viewers of Travelog will not be surprised that this programme on Spain keeps well clear of the Costa Brava and the Costa del Sol. Leaving the crowded beaches and faceless hotels to the package tourists, Samantha Norman explores Madrid, and Samantha Norman explores Madrid, and the show's jocular resident guide, Pete McCarthy, goes to Andahucia. Even in the Spanish capital Norman forsakes the Prado and other big and famous art galleries for Goya frescoes in a tiny chapel, though her reports on shopping and mightille are in more conventional vein. McCarthy, meanwhile, proves that just a few miles from Malaga airport, destination of a million British holidaymakers last year, lies mountainous stenery which is as ruggedly. mountainous scenery which is as ruggedly-striking to look at as it is untouched by the encroachments of modern tourism.

Trouble at the Top: Robin Rides Again BBC2, 9.50pm

The latest film in an excellent series about-risky business ventures concerns the much-loved and much-mocked Reliam Robin. Three times in the past five years the company has gone bust. The latest saviour is Jonathan Heynes, whose experience of car manufacture has been at the other end of the market with Jaguar. He takes over a factory deserted and delapidated, its only assets 14 the accounts, and their young son helping to clean the floor, Heynes mounts his rescue operation. His aim is to drive up production while driving down costs and he pushes himself and his workforce to the limit. His energy and determination are breathtaking but there are many nasty moments before he can claim that the favourite transport of Trotters International Traders is securely

Omnibus: The Wanderer BBC1, 10.25pm

The Hungarian pianist Andras Schiff makes an appropriate guide to the life and music of Franz Schubert, who was born 200 years ago this month. For one thing, Schiff is a distinguished modern interpreter of Schubert's piano works, as he demonstrates in extracts from the exquisite sonatas. For another, he reveals that Schubert, of all the great composers, is the one who touches him most. Schiff's portrait is as deft as his plano playing, drawn with light but telling strokes. He presents Schubert as a man of humility and simplicity who packed an enormous amount into a short span. It was a difficult life, blighted by lack of recognition and, latterly, the syphilis which killed him at the age of 31. But Schiff reckons it was a finished life, rather than one that was cut short and left promise unfulfilled. Peter Waymark

Townsend switched to stand-off

Scotland take wholesale half measures

HAVING suggested in the immediate aftermath of defeat by Wales last weekend that a purge of the team was unlikely, the Scotland selectors appear to have had second thoughts. They have resorted to a radical overhaul of the side for the international against England at Twickennam on Saturday week.

The team, which was an-nounced a week early yesterday to provide a longer period of preparation, shows seven changes, two of them positional. Bryan Redpath, Ronnie Eriksson, Derek Stark and lan Smith are recalled, while Tom Smith, the Watsonians loose-head prop, is the one new cap. Gregor Townsend switches to stand-off half and Tony Stanger to outside centre. Richie Dixon, the Scotland coach, denied the changes were drastic but admitted that the make-up of the England team, which was named on Monday, had a significant bearing on the lectors' deliberations.

For some the surgery has not gone far enough, in that none of the 21-man A squad which emphatically beat Wales has been called upon, not even Alan Tait, whose shortage of top-flight rugby union since his return from league apparently counted against him. Others, such as Peter Wright and Eric Peters, can rightly feel aggrieved, but Arthur Hastie, the manager, said the whole of the A team had been considered and that those players should not be

The clarion call for the reinstatement of Townsend at No 10 has been heeded and he links up again with Redpath in the half-back partnership which served Scotland well last season, and was only interrupted by the latter's back from touring New Zealand. Redpath wins his 22nd cap at the expense of Gary Armstrong, who, along with Craig Chalmers and Scott Hastings. is dropped to the replace-ments' bench.

Once the situation involving Townsend and Chalmers, which occupied much of the selectors six-hour meeting on Monday night, had been re-solved in the Northampton player's favour, the decision was taken to pick a side which, according to Dixon, "would create the environment in which Gregor would thrive. To that end, Eriksson, a hardtackling inside centre, wins his third cap and Ian Smith returns at open-side flanker after surgery on a broken thumb, despite his relative inactivity with Gloucester.

Tom Smith forms part of an inexperienced front row, With only three caps between them, this is an area which England will be looking to exploit. Smith, who makes his debut at the age of 25, was born in London and learnt the sport playing mini-rugby with London Welsh rather than attending Sunday school. He replaces David Hilton, an ever-present in the past 19 internationals.

Smith qualifies via Scottish grandparents and resembles David Sole in style and appearance, with a similarly single-minded approach to rugby. ## Selectors to name 60-strong shortlist for Lions

By DAVID HANDS RUGBY-CORRESPONDENT

THE first million-pound British Isles rugby union touring party will be put together over the next two months. As the five nations championship unfolds, so the 35 players who will represent the first profes-sional Lions to make the trip to South Africa will come more sharply into focus.

As the host union, South Africa will bear a substantial share of the £1 million cost, but the Lions will also be spon-sored by Scottish Provident, the life assurance company, which will pay £400,000 for the right to have its name on the famous jerseys. The cost of support services will push the company's investment up to around £750,000 in a party that will include a manage ment team of 11 - the biggest yet — including coaches, medi-cal and media staff. The Lions selectors

Maldini's defensive manoeuvres sweep Italy back to the future

IN PALERMO

BENEATH its imposing, even intimidating, crags, the Favorita Stadium and a packed, ecstatic Sicilian crowd await a diminished Northern Ireland: and Cesare Maldini's remodelled Italy.

A remodelled Italy in that, after five years of four in line and pushing up to halfway under the never popular Arrigo Sacchi, back they go in an international football match tonight to the traditional catenaccio, a sweeper behind two markers. Except that the designated sweeper, Ciro Ferrara, of Juventus, has not played as such for a long while and Paolo Maldini, the manager's son, is expected to be one of the central markers. It is a role that Maldini Jr has yet to fill. though he has, as he pointed out yesterday, played both as a centre back in a four-man defence and, of course, as an attacking left back. So far he has had a curiously poor season and is only just back again after fracturing a cheekbone. Worse still has been the season of his AC Milan colleague, the other central marker, "Billy" Costacurta, who has been sent off in consecutive games. But a Northern Ireland team without Jain Dowie or Phil Gray up front, without Magilton and Lennon in midfield, without Gillespie on the right wing, is hardly likely to apply great pressure.

Not that this has ever been its way. When, last November, the Ulstermen achieved their gallant draw against Germany in Nuremburg, they had sweepers both behind and in front of the defence. Bryan land manager, has called in Jon McCarthy, the Port Vale midfield player, to bolster his weakened squad. Cesare Maldini, whose only chance this is before England and Wembley on February 12 to put the clock back successfully, said that he is not worried and he clearly is not. If things do not go right at first tonight, then they can be put

The team that he has chosen shows no surprises: round up the usual suspects, with Gianfranco Zola up front, with big Gigi Casiraghi, with Fabrizio Ravanelli likely to be brought on in the second half. Del Piero could come on then, too; he has a stomach upset and, Cesare Maldini said, all will depend on how he looks in training this morning.

"There's no such thing as a friendly game." Gerry Tag-gart, Northern Ireland's resilient centre back and scorer of their goal in Germany, said. They're probably only playEngland and they want to try their system out.

Hamilton has not lost an away match since he took over three years ago. The Italians, I feel, are a very good side although they have had some indifferent performances recently," he said. Chelsea's two Italians, Zola.

and Roberto Di Matteo, seemed particularly cheerful.

Gough opts to play for Kansas next season

RICHARD GOUGH, the Rangers and Scotland central defender, confirmed yesterday that he will play for Kansas City Wizards in the Major League next season. Two FA Carling Premiership clubs, believed to be Sheffield Wednesday and Southampton, had expressed an interest in signing Gough, 34, who also turned down offers from Japan and Europe.

Bristol City have banned 15 spectators for life for their part in violence after the I-I draw with Bristol Rovers in the Nationwide League second division match at Ashton Gate on December 15. A Football Association bearing into the crowd trouble takes spell in the second half though he will not start him.
